Parable of the Sower
by Octavia Butler
Theodysseyofonewomanwhoistwiceas feelinginaworldthathasbecomedoubly dehumanized. Thetimeis 20 25; the place is California, where small walled comunities must prote ct themselves from desperate hordes of scangers and roaming bands of drugaddicts. Whe none such community is overrun, Lauren Olamina, an 18-yea r-old blackwoman, sets off on foot, moving northalong the dangerous coastal highways. Laurenisa "sharer," one who suffers from hyperempathy the ability to feel others' pain as well ash erown.
"Butler's spare, vivid prose style invites comparison with thelikes of Kate Wilhelm and Ursula Le Guin."Kirkus "Moving, frightening, funnyand eerily beautiful." The Washington PostGeneralFiction ScienceFiction 2024
Prodigy is, at its essence, adaptability and persistent, positive obsession. Without persistence, what remains is an enthusias most hemoment. Without adaptability, what remains may be channeled into destructive fanaticism. Without positive obsession, there is nothing at all. EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING
byLaurenOyaOlamina
Parable of the Sower
1
All that you touch

YouChange.
All thatyou Change
Changesyou.
The only lasting truth
IsChange.
God
IsChange.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, JULY 20, 2024

I had my recurring dream last night. I guess I should have expected it. Itcomesto me when Istruggle-- when I twist on my own personalhookand try to pretend that nothingunusual ishappening. It comes to me when I try to be my father's daughter.

Today is our birthday-- my fifteenth and my father's fifty-fifth. Tomorrow, I'll try to please him-- him and the community and God. So last night, I dreamed a reminder that it's all a lie. I think I need to write a boutthedreambecausethisparticularliebothersmeso much.

I'm learningto fly,to levitate myself. No one is teaching me. I'm just learningonmy own, little by little, dream lesson bydream lesson. Not a very subtle image, but a persistent one. I've had many lessons, and I'm better at flying than I used to be. I trust my ability more now, but I'm still afraid. I can't quite control my directionsyet.

Ileanforwardtowardthedoorway.It'sadoorway liketheonebetweenmyroomandthehall.Itseemsto be a long way fromm e, but I lean toward it. Holding my body stiff and tense, I let go of whatever I'm grasping, whateverhas kept me from rising or falling so far. And I lean into the air,straining upward, not moving upward, but not quite falling down either. ThenI do begin to move, as though toslideontheairdriftingafewfe etabovethefloor,caught betwee nterrorand joy.

I drift toward the doorway. Cool, pale light glows from it. Then I slide a little to the right; and a little more.IcanseethatI'mgoingtomissthedoorandhit the wall beside it, but I can't stop or turn. I drift away from the door,a way from the cool glowintoanotherlight.

Thewallbeforemeisburning. Firehassprungfromnowhere, hase aten in through the wall, hasbegun toreachtowardme,reachforme. The firespreads. Idrift into it. It blazes up a round me. I thrashand scramble and try to swim backout of it, grabbinghandfulsofairand fire, kicking, burning! Darkness. Perhaps I awakea little. Idosometimes when the fire swallows me. That's bad. When I wakeup all the way, I can't get back to sleep. I try, but I've neverbeen ableto.

This time I don't wakeupall the way. I fade into these condpart of the dream--the part that 's ordinary and real, the part that didn't seem to matter.

Darkness.

Darknessbrightening.

Stars.

Starscastingtheircool,pale,glintinglight.

"Wecouldn'tseesomanystarswhenIwaslittle,"my stepmother say sto me. She speaks in Spanish,herown firstlanguage.Shestandsstillandsmall,looking up at the broad sweep of the Milky Way. She andIhavegone outafterdarktotakethewashing downfromtheclothesline.Thedayhasbeenhot,as usual, and weboth like the cooldarkness of early night. There'snomoon, but we can see very well. The sky is full of stars.

The neighborhood wallisa massive, looming presencenearby. I see it as a crouchinganimal, perhapsabo ut to spring, more threatening than protective. But my stepmother is there, and she isn't afraid. I stay close to her. I'm seven years old.

I look up at the stars and thedeep, black sky. "Whycouldn'tyouseethestars?" Iaskher. "Everyonecansee them." I spe ak in Spanish, too, as she's taught me. It'san intimacysomehow.

"City lights," she says. "Lights, progress, growth, all those things we're too hot and toopoor to bother withanymore." Shepauses. "When I wasyourage, mymother told methat the stars--the few stars we could see--w ere windows into heaven. Windows for God to look through to keep an eye onus. I believed her for almost a year." My stepmother hands me anarmload of myyoung est brother's diapers. I take them, walk back toward theh ouse where she has left her big wicker laundry basket, and pile the diapers at op the rest of the clothes. The basket is full. I look to see that my stepmother is not watching me, then let myself fall backward onto the soft mound of stiff, clean clothes. For a moment, the fall is like floating.

I lie there, lookingupat the stars. I pick out some of the constellations and name the stars that make them up. I've learned them from an a stronomy book that belonged to my father's mother.

Iseethesuddenlightstreakofameteorflashingwestwarda cross the sky. I stare after it, hoping toseeanother. ThenmystepmothercallsmeandIgo backtoher.

"There are city lights now," I say to her. "They don'thide the stars."

Sheshakesherhead."Therearen'tanywherenearas manya stherewere. Kids today havenoidea what a blaze of light citiesused to be--andnot thatlongago."

"I'd rather have thestars," I say.

"The stars are free." She shrugs. "I'd ratherhave the city lights back myself, the sooner the better. But we can afford the stars."

2

A gift of God

Maysearunreadyfingers.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SUNDAY, JULY 21, 2024

At least three years ago, my father's God stoppedbeingmyGod.Hischurchstoppedbeingmychurch.And yet, today, because I'm a coward, I let myself be initiated into that church. I let my father baptizemein all three names of that Godwhoisn't mineany more. MyGodhasanothername.

We got upearly this morningbecause we had to go across town to church. Most Sundays, Dad holdschu rchservicesinourfrontrooms. He'saBaptist minister, and eventhough notallofthe people who live within our neigh borhood walls are Baptists, those who feel the need to go to church are glad to come tous. That way they don't have to risk going outside where things are so dangerous and crazy. It's bad enough that some people-- my father for one--have to go out to school any more. Adults getner vous about kids going outside.

But today was special. For today, my father madearrangements with another minister--afriend of his who still had a real church building with a real baptistery.

Dadoncehadachurchjustafewblocksoutsideourwall. He began it befo re there were so many walls. But after it had been slept in by the homeless, robbed, and vandalized several times, someonepouredgasoline inandarounditandburneditdown. Sevenofthehomelesspeoplesleepinginsideonthat last night burne dwith it.

Butsomehow, Dad's friend Reverend Robinson has managed to keep his church from being destroyed.

We rode our bikesto it thismorning-- me, two of mybrothers, fourotherneighborhoodkids who were ready to be baptize d, plus my father and some other neighborhood adults riding shotgun. All the adults were arm ed. That's the rule. Goout in a bunch, and goarmed.

Thealternativewastobebaptizedinthebathtubat home. Thatwouldhavebeencheaperandsaferandfine with me. I said so, but noone paid any attention to me. To the adults, goingo utside to a real churchwaslike steppingbackintothegoodolddayswhen therewere churchesallover the place and too many lightsandgasolinew as for fueling carsand trucks instead of for torching things. They neve rmiss a chancetor elive the good old dayso rtotellkidshow greatit's going to be when the country gets back on its feet and good times come back.

Yeah.

Touskids--mostofus--thetripwasjustan adventure,anexcusetogooutsidethewall. We would be baptized out of dutyorasakindofinsuran ce, but most of us aren't that much concerned with religion. I am, but then I have a different religion.

"Why take chances," Silvia Dunn said to me a fewdaysago. "Maybethere's something to all this religion stuff." Her parents thought there was, so she was withus.

MybrotherKeithwhowasalsowithusdidn'tshareany of my beliefs. He just didn't care. Da dwanted him to be baptized, sowhat the hell. There wasn't much that Keith did care about. He liked to hang outwithhisfri endsandpretendtobegrownup,dodge workanddodgeschoolanddodgechurch. He'sonlytwelve, the oldest of my threeb rothers. I don't like him much, but he's my stepmother's favorite. Threesmartsonsandonedumb one, and it'sthedumb one sheloves best.

Keith lookedaround more thananyone as we rode. His ambition, if you couldcall it that, is to get out of theneighborhoodandgotoLosAngeles.He'snevertoo clear abou twhat he'll do there. He just wants to go to the big city and make big money. According to my father, the bigcity isacarcasscovered with too many maggots. I think he's right, though not all the maggots are in L.A. They're here, too.

But maggots tendnot to be early-morning types. Werodepastpeoplestretchedout, sleepingonthe sidewal ks, and a few just waking up, but they paid no attention to us. Is a wat least three people who weren't go in gto wake up again, ever. One of them washeadless. Icaughtmyselflookingaroundforthehead. After that, I tried not to look around at all.

A woman, young, naked, and filthy stumbled along pastus. I got a look at her slack expressionandreali zedthatshewasdazedordrunkorsomething.

Maybeshehadbeenrapedsomuchthatshewascra zy. I'd heard stories of that happening. Or maybeshewas justhighondrugs. Theboysinourgroupalmost fell off their bikes, sta ring at her. What wonderful religious tho ughts they would behavingforawhile.

Thenakedwomanneverlookedatus.Iglanced backafterwe'dpassedherandsawthatshehad settleddowninthe weedsagainstsomeoneelse's neighborhoodwall.

Alotofourridewasalongoneneighborhoodwall afteranother; someablocklong, sometwoblocks, some five. . . . Up toward the hills there wer ewalledestates--onebighouseandalotofshackylittledependencies where the servants lived. We didn't pass anything like that today. In fact we passed a coupleofneighborhoodssopo orthattheirwallswere made u pof unmortared rocks, chunks of concrete, and trash. Thentherewere the pitiful, unwalled residentialareas. A lot of the housesweretrashed--burned, vandalized, infested with drunkso rdruggies or squatted-in by homeless families with their filthy, gaunt, half-naked children. Their kids were wideawakeandwatchingusthismorning. If eel sorry for the little ones, but the ones my agea ndoldermakeme nervous. Weridedownthemiddleof thecrackedstreet, and the kidscomeout and stand along the curbtostareatus. They just standand stare. I think if therewere only oneortwo of us, orif they couldn't seeour guns, they might try to pull us downandstealourbikes, our clothes, our shoes, whateve r. Then what? Rape? Murder? We could wind uplike that naked woman, stumbling along, dazed, may be hurt, sure to attract dangerous attention unless she could steal some clothing. I wish we could have given her something.

Mystepmothersayssheandmyfatherstoppedto helpaninjuredwomanonce, and the guyswhohad injuredherju mpedoutfrombehindawalland almostkilledthem.

Andwe'reinRobledo--20milesfromLosAngeles, and,accordingtoDad,oncearich,green,unwalled littlecity thathehadbeeneagertoabandonwhen hewasayoungman.LikeKeith,hehadwantedto escapethedullnessof Robledoforbigcityexcitement. L.A. was better then--less lethal. He livedtherefor21years.Thenin2010,hisp arents weremurderedandheinheritedtheirhouse. Whoeverkilledthemhadrobbedthehouseandsma shed up the furniture, but they didn't torchanything.Therewasnoneighborhoodwallback then.

Crazy to live without a wall to protect you. Even inRobledo,mostofthestreetpoor--squatters,winos, junki es,homelesspeopleingeneral--are dangerous. They'redesperateorcrazyorboth.

That's enoughtomake anyoned angerous. Worse for me, they often have thing swrong with them. They cut off each other's ears, arms, legs. . . . They carryuntreated diseases and festering wounds. They have no money to spend on water to washwithsoeventheunwoundedhavesores. Theydon't get enough to eat so they're malnourished-- or they eat bad food andp oisonthemselves. As I rode, I tried not to look around at them, but I couldn't helpseei ng--collecting--someoftheirgeneralmisery.

I can take a lot of pain without falling apart. I've had to learn to do that. But it was hard, today, to keep pedalingandkeepupwiththeotherswhenjust abouteveryoneIsawmademefeelworseand worse.

My father glanced back at me every now and then. He tells me, "You can beat this thing. You don't have to give in to it." He has alwayspretended, or perhapsbelieved, that my hyperempathy syndromewassomethingIcouldshakeoffandforgetabout. Theshari ngisn'treal,afterall.Itisn'tsomemagicorESP that allow sme toshare the pain or the pleasure of other people. It's delusional. Even I admit that. My brother Keith used to pretend to be hurt just to trickmeintosharinghi ssupposedpain.Onceheusedred ink as fake blood to make me bleed. I was eleven then, and I still bled through the skin when I sawsomeoneelsebleeding.Icouldn'thelpdoingit, and I always worried that it would give meaway to peopleoutside the family.

I haven't shared bleedingwith anyone since I was twelve and got my first period. What a relief that was. I just wish all the rest of it had goneaway, too. Keith only tricked me into bleeding that once, and I beat the hell out of him for it. I didn't fight much when I was little because it hurt me so. I felt every blow that I struck, just as though I'd hit myself. So when I did decide that I had to fight, I set out to hurt the otherkidmorethankidsusuallyhurtoneanother.I brokeMichaelTalcott'sarmandRubinQuintanilla'snose. I knocked out four of Silvia Dunn's teeth. They all earned what I did to them two or three times over. I got punishe devery time, and I resented it. It was doublepunishment, after all, and my father and stepmother knewit. But knowing didn't stopthem. I think they did it to satisfy the other kids' parents. But when I beat up Keith, I knew that Cory or Dad or both of them would punish me for it-- mypoor little brother, after all. So I had to see that my poor little brother paid inadvance. What I did to him had to be worthwhilein spite of what they woulddoto me.

It was.

We both got it later from Dad-- me for hurting ayoungerkidandKeithforriskingputting"familybusiness" into the street. Dadi sbig onprivacy and "family business." There's a whole range of things we nevereven hint about outsidethe family. First among theseisanything about my mother, myhyperem pathy, and how the two are connected. To my father, the whole busin ess is shameful. He's apreacher and professor and adean. A first wife who was adrugaddict and adaughter who is drug damaged is not something he want sto boast about. Lucky for me. Being the most vulnerable person Iknow is damned sure not something I want to boast about.

I can't do a thing about my hyperempathy, no matter what Dad thinksorwants orwishes. I feel what I see others feelingorwhat I believe they feel. Hyperempathy iswhat the doctors call an "organic delusional syndrome." Big shit. It hurts, that's all I know. Thanks to Paracetco, the smart pill, the Einsteinpowder, the particular drugmymother cho se to abuse before my birth killedher, I'm crazy. I get a lot of grief that doesn't belong to me, and that isn't real. But it hurts.

I'msupposedtosharepleasurean dpain, but thereisn'tmuchpleasurearoundthesedays. Abouttheonly pleasure I've found that I enjoy sharing i ssex. I get the guy's good feeling and my own. I almost wishI didn't. Iliveinatiny, walledfish-bowlcul-de-sac community, and I'mthepreacher's daughter. There's a real limit to what I can doa sfarassex goes. Anyway, my neurotransmitters are scrambled and they're goingto stay scrambled. But I can dookayaslongasotherpeopledon'tknowaboutme.Inside ournei ghborhoodwallsIdofine.Ourridestoday,though, wereh ell. Going andcoming, they were all the worst things I've ever felt-- shadows andghosts, twistsand jabs of unexpectedpain.

If I don't look too longat old injuries, they don't hurtmetoomuch. Therewas an aked little boywhose skinwas amassof bigredsores; aman with a huge scabover the stump where his right handused to be; a little girl, naked, maybeseven years old withbloodrunningdownherbarethighs. Awomanwithaswollen, bloody, beaten face. . . .

Imusthaveseemedjumpy. Iglancedaroundlikea bird, not letting mygazerestonanyonelongerthanit took me to see that they weren't coming in my direction or aiming anything atme.

DadmayhavereadsomethingofwhatIwasfeelingin my expression. I try not to let myfaceshow anything, but he's good at reading me. Sometimes peoplesay I lookgrim or angry. Better to have them think that than know the truth. Better to have them thinkanything than let themknow just how easyit is to hurt me.

Dadhadinsistedonfresh, clean, potablewaterfor the baptism. He couldn't afford it, of course . Who could? That was the other reason for the four extra kids:

Silvia Dunn, Hector Quintanilla, CurtisTalcott, and DrewBalter, along with my brothers Keith andMarcu s.Theotherkids'parentshadhelpedwith costs.Theythoughtaproperbaptismwasimportant enoughtospend somemoneyandtakesomerisks. Iwastheoldestbyabouttwomonths.Curtiswasnext. As mucha sI hated being there, I hated even more that Curtiswas there. I care about him more than I want to. I care what he thinks of me. I worry that I'll fall apart in public some day and he'll see. But not today.

By the time we reached the fortress-church, my jaw-muscleshurtfromclinchingandunclinchingmy teeth, and overall, I was exhausted.

There were only five or six dozenpeople at the service -- enough to fill up our front rooms at home and looklike a big crowd. At the church, though, withitssurroundingwallanditssecuritybarsandLazor wireandits hugehollownessinside,anditsarmedguards, the cro wd seemed a tiny scattering of people. That was all right. The last thing I wantedwasabigaudiencetomaybetripmeupwithpain. Thebaptismwentjustasplanned. Theysentuskidsoff to the bathrooms ("men's," "women's," "please do not put paper of any kind into toilets," "water for washing in bucket at left. ...") to undress and put on whitegowns. Whenwewereready, Curtis's father tookustoananteroomwherewecouldhearthe preaching--fromthefirst chapter of Saint Johnand the second chapter of The Acts-- and wait our turns. My turncame last. I assume that wasmy father's idea. First the neighborkids, then my brothers, then me. For reasons that don't make a lot of sense to me, Dad thinks I need more humility. I think my particular biological humility-- or humiliation-- ismore than enough.

What the hell? Someone had to be last. I just wish Icouldhavebeencourageousenoughtoskipthe thing altogether.

So, "In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. ..."

Catholicsget this stuff over withwhen they're babies. I wish Baptists did. I almost wish I could believe it was important the way a lot of peopleseem to, the way my father seemsto. Failing that, I wish I didn't care

But I do. The idea of God is much on my mind these days. I've been paying attention to what other peo ple believe-- whether they believe, and if so what kind of God they believe in. Keith saysGod is just the adults'way of trying to scare you into doingwhat they want. He doesn't say that around Dad, but he says it. He believes in what he sees, and no matter what'sin front of him, he doesn't see much. I supposeDadwouldsaythataboutmeifheknewwhat I believe. Maybe he'd be rig ht. But it wouldn't stop me from seeing what I see.

A lot of people seem to believe in a big-daddy-God or a big-cop-Godora big-king-God. They believe in akindofsuper-person. Afewbelieve Godisanother word for nature. And nature turns out to mean just about anything they happe nnot to understand or feel in control of.

Some say Godisa spirit, a force, an ultimate reality. Askseven people what all of that means and you'll get seven different answers. So what is God? Just another name for what ever make syou feel special and protected?

There's a big, early-season storm blowing itself out in the Gulf of Mexico. It's bouncedaround the Gulf, killing people from Florida to Texas and down intoMexico. There are over 700 known deads of ar. One hurricane. And how many people has it hurr? How many are going to starve later because of destroyed crops? That'snature. Is it God? Most of the dead arethestreetpoorwhohavenowheretogoandwho don'the arthewarningsuntilit'stoolatefortheirfeetto ta kethem tosafety. Where'ssafety for them,anyway?Isitasinagain stGodtobepoor?We're almostpoorourselves.Therearefewerandfewerjobs among us, more of us bein gbo rn, morekids growingupwith nothingto look forward to. Oneway or another, we'll all be poor some day. The adults say things will get better, but they never have. How will God-- my father's God-- behave toward us whenwe'repoor?

IsthereaGod?Ifthereis,doeshe(she?it?)care aboutus?DeistslikeBenjaminFranklinandThomasJeffersonb e lievedGod was something that made us, then left uson our own.

"Misguided,"DadsaidwhenIaskedhimabout Deists."Theyshouldhavehadmorefaithinwhattheir Bible stold them."

I wonder if the people on the Gulf Coast still have faith. People have had faith through horrible disasters befor e. I read a lot about that kind of thing. I read a lot period. My favorite book of the Bible is Job. I think it says more about my father's God in particular and gods in general than anything else I'veeverread.

In the book of Job, Godsays hemade everythingandheknowseverythingsonoonehasanyrighttoquestion w hat he does withan y of it. Okay. That works. That Old Testament God doesn't violate thewaythingsaren ow.ButthatGodsoundsalotlike Zeus--asuper-powerfulman,playingwithhistoysthe way my youngest brothers play with toy soldiers. Bang, bang! Seven toys fall dead. If they're yours, youmaketherules. Who cares what the toysthink. Wipeo ut a toy's family, then give it a brand new family. Toy children, like Job'schildren, areinterchangeable.

MaybeGodisakindofbigkid, playing withhistoys. If he is, what difference does it make if 700 peopleget killedinahurricane--orifsevenkidsgoto churchandgetdippedinabigtankofexpensive water?

But what if all that is wrong? What if Godis something else altogether?

3

WedonotworshipGod.

We perceive and attendGod. WelearnfromGod.

Withforethoughtandwork, WeshapeGod.

In the end, we yield to God. Weadaptandendure,

Forweare Earthseed, And Godis Change.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

TUESDAY, JULY 30, 2024

One of the astronauts on the latest Mars mission hasbeenkilled. Somethingwentwrongwithherprote ctive suit and the rest of her team couldn't get her back to the shelter in time to save her. Peoplehereintheneigh borhoodaresayingshehadno business going to Mars, anyway. All that moneywastedonanothercrazyspacetripwhensomanypeopleh ere on earth can't afford water, food, orshelter.

The cost of water has gone upagain. And I heard on the new sto day that more water peddlers are being killed. Peddlers sellwater to squatters and the street poor--and to people who've managed to hold onto their homes, but not to pay their utility bills. Peddlers are being found with their throat scutand their money and their hand trucks stolen. Dads a dsays water now costs several times as much as gas powered car, truck, or cycle. Vehicles like that are rusting indrive ways and being cannibalized for metal and plastic.

It's alotharder to give upwater.

Fashion helps. You're supposed to be dirty now. If you'reclean, you make a target of yourself. People think you're showing off, trying to be better than they are. Among they oungerkids, being clean is agreat way to start a fight. Cory won't let us stay dirty here in the neighborhood, but we all have filthy clothes towear outside the walls. Even inside, mybrothers throw dirton themselves as soon as they get away from the house. It's better that ngetting beatenup all the time.

TonightthelastbigWindowWalltelevisioninthe neighborhoodwentdarkforgood. Wesawthedead astronaut withallofred,rockyMarsaroundher. We sawadust-dryreservoirandthreedeadwater peddlerswiththeirdi rty-bluearmbandsandtheirheads cut halfway off. And we saw whole blocks of boardedupbuildingsburning inLosAngeles. Of course, noonewouldwastewatertryingtoputsuch firesout.

Thenthe Windowwent dark. The sound had flickered up and downform on this, but the picture was always as promised--likelooking through a vast, open win dow.

The Yannisfamilyhasmadeabusinessofhaving peopleintolookthroughtheir Window. Dadsays that kind of unlicensed businessisn't legal, but helet us gotowatch sometimes because hedidn't see any harm in it, and it helped the Yannises. A lot of small businessesare illegal, even though they don'thurt anyone, and they keep ahouse holdor two alive. The Yanni s Window is about a soldas I am. It covers the longwest wall of their living room. They must have had plenty of money back when they bought it. For the past coup le of years, though, they've been charging admission--only letting in peoplefromtheneighborhood--andsellingfruit,fruitjuice,a corn bread, orwalnuts. Whateverthey had too much of in theirgarden, they found a way to sell.

They showedmovies from their library andlet uswatchnewsandwhateverelsewasbroadcast. They couldn't afford to subscribe to any of the new multisensory stuff, and their ol dWindow couldn't have received most of it, anyway.

They had no reality vests, no touch-rings, and noheadsets. Theirsetupwasjustaplain, thin-screened Window.

All we have left now are threesmall, ancient, murkylittleTVsetsscatteredaroundtheneighborhood, a couple ofcomputersusedforwork, and radios. Every household still has at least one working radio. A lot of our everyday news is from radio.

IwonderwhatMrs. Yanniswilldonow. Hertwosiste rshave moved in withher, and they're workingsomaybeit willbeallright. One is apharmacist and the other is an urse. They don't earn much, but Mrs. Yannisownstheho usefree and clear. It washer parents 'house.

Allthreesistersarewidowsandbetweenthemtheyhave twelve kid s, all younger than I am. Two yearsago, Mr. Yannis, adentist, waskilledwhileridinghis electriccyclehomefromthewalled, guardedclinic whereheworke d.Mrs. Yannissayshewascaught inacrossfire, hitfromtwodirections, then shotonce moreatcloserange. His bike wasstolen. The police investigated, collected their fee, and couldn't find a thing. People get killed like that all the time. Unless it happens in front of a police station, there are never any witnesses.

SATURDAY, AUGUST3, 2024

The dead astronaut is going tobebrought back to Earth. She wantedto be buried on Mars. She saidthat whensherealizedshewasdying. Shesaid Marswastheonethingshehadwantedallherlife, andnowshewouldbep artofitforever.

But the Secretary of Astronautics saysno. He says her body might be a contaminant. Idiot.

Canhebelieve that any microorganism living inor on herbody would have a prayer of surviving and going native in that cold, thin, lethal ghost of anatmosphere? Maybehecan. Secretaries of Astronautics don't have to know much about science. They have to know about politics. Their sist he youngest Cabinet department, and already it sfighting for its life. Christopher Morpeth Donner, one of the men running for President this year, has promised to abolish it if he's elected. My father agrees with Donner.

"Bread and circuses," my father sayswhenthere's spacenews on the radio. "Politicians and big corporation sget the bread, andwe get the circuses."

"Spacecould be our future," Isay. I believe that. As far as I'm concerned, space exploration and colo nizationare among the few thingsleft over from the last century that canhelpusmore than they hurt us. It's hard to get anyone to see that, though, when there's somuch suffering going on justout side our walls.

Dadjustlooksatmeandshakeshishead."You don't understand," hesays. "You don't have any idea what a criminalwaste of time and money that so-called space program is." He'sgoing to vote forDonner.He'stheonlypersonIknowwho'sgoingtovote at all. Most people have givenu pon politicians. After all, politicianshave been promising to return us to the glory, wealth, andorder of the twentieth century every since I canremember. That's what the spaceprog ramisabout these days, at least for politicians. Hey, we can run a space station, a station on the moon, and soon, a colonyon Mars. That proves we'r estill a great, forward-looking, powerful nation, right?

Yeah.

Well, we're barely a nation at all anymore, but I'm glad we'restill in space. Wehave to be going some place other thandown the toilet.

And I'm sorry that astronaut will bebrought back from herown chosenheaven. Hername was Alicia CatalinaGodinezLeal.Shewasachemist.Iintend torememberher.Ithinkshecanbeakindofmodel forme.Shesp entherlifeheadingforMars-- preparingherself,becominganastronaut,gettingon a Mars crew, going to Mars, beginning to figure out how to terraform Mars, beginning to createsheltered placeswherepeoplecanliveandworknow.... Marsisarock--cold,empty,almostairless,dead. Yet it's heaven in a way. W ecansee it in the nightsky,awholeotherworld,buttoonearby,tooclose withinthereachofthe peoplewho'vemadesuchahell of life here on Earth.

MONDAY, AUGUST 12, 2024

Mrs. Simsshotherselftoday--orrather, sheshot herselfafewdaysago, and Coryand Dadfoundhertoday. Cory went a little crazy for awhile afterward. Poor, sanctimonious, old Mrs. Sims. She used to sit in our fron t-room church every Sunday, large-print Bible in hand, and shout out her responses: "Yes, Lord!" "Halle lujah!" "Thank you, Jesus!" "Amen!" During the rest of the weekshe sewed, made baskets, took care of her garden, sold what shecould from it, took care of pre-school children, and talked about every one who wasn't as holyasshe thought shewas.

ShewastheonlypersonI'veeverknownwholived alone. Shehadawhole bighouse to herself because she and the wife of heronly son hated each other. Herson and his family were poor, but they wouldn't live with her. Too bad.

Differentpeoplefrightenedherinsomedeep,hard,ugly way. She didn't like the Hsufamily beca usetheywere ChineseandHispanic,andtheolder ChinesegenerationisstillBuddhist.She'slivedacou ple of doorsupfrom them for longerthan I've been alive, but they were still from Saturn as far asshewas concerned.

"Idolaters," she wouldcall them if none of them were around. At least she care denough about neighborly relations to do her talking about them behind their backs. They brough the reaches and figs and a length of good cotton cloth last month when she was robbed.

That robbery wasMrs. Sims'sfirst major tragedy. Threemenclimbedovertheneighborhoodwall, cuttingthro ughthestrandsofbarbedwireandLazorwire on top. Lazor wire i sterriblestuff. It'ssofine and sharp that it slic esinto the wingsorfeet of birds who eitherdon't see it orsee it and try to settle on it. People, though, can al ways findaway over, under, orthrough.

Everyone brought Mrs. Sims thingsafter the robbery, in spite of the way she is. Was. Food, clothing, mo ney. ... We took up collections for heratchurch. The thieveshadtied herupandle fther--after one of them raped her. An old lady like that! They grabbed all her food, her jewelry that had once belonged to her mother, her clothes, and worst of all, her supply of cash. It turns outshe kept that—all ofit—inablueplasticmixingbowlhighupinherkitchen cabinet. Poor, cra zy old lady. She cametomyfather,cryingandcarryingonaftertherobbery becausenowshe couldn'tbuytheextrafoodshe neededtosupplementwhatshegrew. Shecouldn'tpay her utility bills or her upcoming property taxes. Shewouldbethrownoutofherhouseintothe street! Shewouldstarve!

Dadtoldheroverandoverthatthechurchwouldnever let that happen, but she didn't believe him. Shetalkedo nandonabouthavingtobeabeggarnow, while Dad an dCory tried to reassureher. Thefunnythingis,shedidn't likeuseitherbecauseDad hadgoneandmarried"thatMexicanwoman ifthat's what you choose to call her. Most people just call her Coryor Mrs. Olamina.

Cory-ah-zan." It just isn't that hard to say "Corazon"

Cory neverlet on that she was offended. She and Mrs. Simswere sugary sweet to one another. A little morehypocrisytokeepthepeace.

LastweekMrs.Sims'sson, his fivekids, his wife, her brother, and her brother's threekids all died in a housefire--anarsonfire. The son's househad been in an unwalled a reanorth and east of us, closer to the foothills. It wasn't a bad area, but it was poor. Naked. One night some one torched the house. May be it was a vengeance fire set by som eenemy of a family member or maybe some crazy just set itforfun. I'veheard there's an ewillegald rugth at make spe oplewant to set fires.

Anyway, no one knowswho did it to the Sims/Boyer families. No one saw anything, of course.

And no one gotout of the house.Odd, that. Elevenpeople, and no one gotout.

So about threedays ago, Mrs. Sims shot herself.Dadsaidhe'dheardfromthecopsthatitwasabout threedays ago.Thatwouldhavebeenjusttwodays aftersheheardaboutherson'sdeath.Dadwentto seeherthismorningbe causeshemissedchurchyesterd ay. Cory forcedherself to go alongbecauseshethoughtsheshould.Iwishshe hadn't.Tome,dead bodie sare disgusting. They stink, and if they're old enough, there are maggots. But what the hell? They'redead. Theyaren't suffering, and if you didn't like them when they were alive, why get so upsetabouttheirbeingdead?Corygetsupset.Shejumps onmeforsharingpainwiththeliving,butshetriesto shareitwiththedead.

I began writing thisabout Mrs. Sims becauseshe killed herself. That'swhat'supset me. She believed, like Dad, that if you kill yourself, you go to hell andburnforever. Shebelieved in aliteral acceptance of everything in the Bible. Yet, when thing sgot to be too much forher, shedecided to tradepain now for eternal pain in the reafter.

Howcouldshedothat?

Did she really believe in anything at all? Was it all hypocrisy?

OrmaybeshejustwentcrazybecauseherGodwas demandingtoomuchofher.ShewasnoJob.Inreallife, how many people are?

SATURDAY, AUGUST17, 2024

I can't get Mrs. Simsout of my mind. Somehow, sheandhersuicidehavegottentangledupwiththe astronauta ndherdeathandherexpulsionfromheaven. I need to write about what I believe. I need to begin to put together the scattered verses that I've beenwritingaboutGodsinceIwastwelve.Mostofthem aren't much good. The ysay what I need to say, but they don't say it very well. A few are the way they should be. They press on me, too, like the two deaths. I try to hide in all the work there is to do hereforthehousehold, formyfather's church, and for the school Corykeepstoteachthen eighborhood kids. The truth is, I don't care about any of those things, but they keep meb usy and make me tired, and most of the time, I sleep without dreaming. And Dadbeams when pe opletellhimhows martand industrious Iam.

I love him. He's the best person I know, and I care what he thinks. I wish I didn't, but I do.

For whatever it'sworth, here'swhat I believe. It took me a lot of time to understand it, then a lot more time with a dictionary and a thesaurus to say it just right-- just the way it has to be. In the past year, it's gone through twenty-five or thirty lumpy, incoherent rewrites. This is theright one, the trueone. This is therefore the trueone is the true one.

God is Power-- Infinite, Irresistible, Inexorable, Indifferent.

And yet, God is Pliable--Trickster,

Teacher, Chaos, Clay.

God exists to be shaped. God is Change.

This is the literal truth.

Godcan'tberesistedorstopped, butcan be shaped and focused. This means Godi snot to be prayed to. Prayers only help the persondoing the praying, and then, only if they strengthen and focus that person's resolve. If they're used that way, they can help us in our only real relationship with God. They help us to shape Godand to accept and work with the shapes that Godimposes on us. Godispower, and in the end, Godp revails.

Butwecanrigthegameinourownfavorifweunderstand that God exi sts to be shaped, and willbe shaped, withorwithout our forethought, with orwithoutourintent.

That's what I know. That's some of it anyway. I'm not like Mrs. Sims. I'm not some kind of potential Job, long suffering, stiff necked, then, at last, either humblebeforeanall-knowing almighty, or destroyed. My God doesn't love me or hate meor watch over meorknow me at all, and I feel no love for or loyalty to my God. My God just is.

Maybe I'll be more like Alicia Leal, the astronaut. Likeher, I believe insomething that I thinkmy dying, denying,backward-lookingpeopleneed.Idon'thave allofityet.Idon'tevenknowhowtopassonwhatIdo have. I've got to learn to do that. It scares me how many things I've got to learn. Howwill I learn them?

Isany of this real?

Dangerousquestion. Sometimes Idon't know the answer. I doubt myself. I doubt what I think I know. I try to forget about it. After all, if it's real, why doesn't anyone else know about it. Everyone know that change is in evitable. From the second law of the rmodynamics to Darwinian evolution, from Buddhism's insistence that nothing is permanent and all suffering results from our delusions of permanence to the third chapter of Ecclesia stes ("To everything there is a season. . . . "), change is part of life, of existence, of the common wisdom. But I don't believe we'redealing with all that that means. We haven't even begun to deal with it.

We give lip service to acceptance, asthoughacceptancewere enough. Then we goon to create super-people-super-parents, super-kings and queens, super-cops--to be our gods and to look after us-- to stand between us and God. Yet Godhas been here all along, shaping us and being shaped by us inn oparticular way or in too many ways at once like an amoeba--or like a cancer. Chaos.

Even so, why can't I do what othershave done-- ignore the obvious. Live a normal life. It's hard enough just to do that in this world.

Butthisthing(Thisidea?Philosophy?Newreligion?)won't let me alone, won 't let me forget it, won't let me go. Maybe. . . . Maybe it's like my sharing: One more weirdness; one more crazy, deep-rooteddelusion that I'mstuckwith. I amstuckwith it. And in time, I'll have to do something about it. In spite of what my father will say or do to me, in spite of the poisonous rottenness outside the wall where I might be exiled, I'll have to do something about it.

That reality scares me to death.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2024

President William Turner Smith lost yesterday's election. Christopher Charles Morpeth Donner is our new President--P resident-elect. So what are we infor? Donner has already said that as soon as possible after his in auguration next year, he'll be gint o dismantle the "wasteful, pointless, unnecessary "moon and Marsprograms. Near space programs dealing with communications and experimentation will be privatized -- sold off.

Also, Donnerhas aplan for putting people back to work. Hehopestoget laws changed, suspend "overly restrictive" minimumwage, environmental, and workerprotection laws for those employerswilling totakeonhomelessemployeesandprovide themwithtrainingandadequateroomandboard. What' sadequate, I wonder: A houseorapartment? Aroom? Abedinasharedroom? Abarracksbed? Spaceonafloor? Spaceonthe ground? Andwhatabout people with big families? Won 't they be seen as bad investments? Won't it make much moresense for companies to hir esingle people, childless cou ples, or, at most, people with only one or two kids? I wonder.

And what about those suspended laws? Will it be legal to poison, mutilate, or infect people-- as longas you provide themwith food, water, and space todie?

Dad decided not to vote for Donner after all. He didn't vote for anyone. He saidpoliticians turnedhisstom ach.

2025

Intelligence is ongoing, individual adaptability. Adaptations that an intelligent species may make in a singe generation, other species make over many generations of selective breeding and selective dying. Yet intelligence demanding. If it is misdirected by accident or by by accident or by breeding and dying.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

by LaurenOya Olamina

4

A victim of God may, Throughlearning adaption, Become apartner of God. A victim of God may, Throughforethoughtandplanning, BecomeashaperofGod.

Or a victim of God may,

Throughshortsightednessandfear, Remai nGod's victim,

God'splaything, God'sprey.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 2025

We had a fire today. People worry so much about fire, but the little kids will play with it if they can. We were lucky with thisfire. Amy Dunn, three yearsold, managed to start it in her family'sgarage.

Once the fire began to crawlupthe wall, Amy got scaredand ran into the house. She knewshe haddone somethingbad, soshedidn'ttellanyone. She hidunderhergrandmother's bed.

Outback, the drywood of the garage burned fast and hot. Robin Balters awthes moke and rangthe emergency bell on the island in our street. Robin's only ten, but she's a bright little kid--one of my step mother stars tudents. She keepsherhead. If she hadn't alerted people as soon as she saw the smoke, the fire could have spread.

Iheardthebellandranoutlikeeveryoneelsetosee whatwaswrong. The Dunnsliveacross the street from us, so I couldn't miss the smo ke.

Thefireplanworkedthewayitwassupposed to. The adult menand women put the fire out with gardenhoses, shovels, wettowels and blankets. Those without hoses beat at the edges of the fire and smothered them with dirt. Kids my age helpedout where we were needed and put out any new fires started by flying embers. We brought buckets to fill withwater, and shovels, blankets, and to welso four own. There were a lot of us, and we kept our eyes open. The very old people watched the little kids and kept them out of the way and out of trouble. No one missed Amy. No one had seen her in the Dunnbackyard, so no one thought about her. Her grand mother found her much later and got the truthout of her.

Thegaragewasatotalloss. Edwin Dunnsalvaged someofhisgarden and carpentry equipment, but not much. The grape fruit treenext to the garage and the two peach trees behind it were half-burned, too, but they might survive. The carrot, squ ash, collard, and potato plants were a trampled mess.

Of course, noone called the firedepartment. No one would takeon fireservice feesjust tosave anuno ccupiedgarage. Mostofourhouseholdscouldn't affordanotherbigbill, anyway. Thewaterwastedon putting outthe firewas going to be harden ought op ay for.

What will happen, I wonder, to poor little Amy Dunn.Noonecaresabouther.Herfamilyfeedsherand,nowand then, cle ansher up,but they don't love her or even like her. Her motherTracy isonly a yearolderthanI am.Shewas13whenAmywasborn. Shewas12whenher27-year-oldunclewhohadbeen rapin gher for years managed to make herpregnant.

Problem: UncleDerekwasabig, blond, handsomeguy, funny and bright and well-liked. Tra cy was, is, dull and homely, sulky and dirty-looking. Even whenshe's clean, shelooks splotchy, dirty. Someofher problems might have come from being raped by UncleDerek for years. UncleDerekwas Tracy's mother' syoungest brother, her favorite brother, but when people realized what he had been doing, the neighborhood mengot together and su ggested hego live somewhere else. People didn't want him around their daughters. Irrational as usual, Tracy's motherblamedTracyforhisexile,andforherown embarrassment.Notmanygirlsintheneighborhoodhave babie sbefore they dragsome boy to my father and have himunite them in holy matrimony. But there wasnoone to marry Tracy, and no money forprenatalcareoranabortion. Andpoor Amy, asshe grew, lookedmoreandmorelike Tracy: scrawny and splochy with sparse, stringy hair. I don't think she'll eve repretty.

Tracy'smaternalinstinctsdidn'tkickin,andIdoubt thathermotherChristmasDunnhasany.TheDunnfamily has a rep utation forcraziness. There are sixteen of them living in the Dunnhouse, and at least a third are nuts. Amy isn't crazy, though. Not yet. She's neglected and lonely, and like any little kid left on her own too much, she finds ways to amuse herself.

I've never seenanyone hit Amy or curseheroranythinglikethat. The Dunnsdocare what peoplethink of them. But no one paysa ny attention to her, either. Shespendsmost of her time playing alone in the dirt. She also eats the dirt and what evershe finds in it, includin gbugs. But not long ago, just out of curiosity, I took her to our hous e, sponged her off, taughther the alphabet, and showed her how to write her name. She loved it. She's got a hungry, able little mind, and she loves attention.

Tonight I askedCory if Amy could start schoolearly. Cory doesn't takekidsuntil they're five or close to five, but she saidshe'd let Amy in ifI would take charge of her. I expected that, though I don't like it. I help with the five and six year olds, anyway. I've beentakingcareoflittlekidssinceIwasone,andI'm tired of it. I think, though, that if someonedoesn't help Amynow,somedayshe'lldosomethingalotworse tha nburningdown her family'sgarage.

Problem:UncleDerekwasabig,blond,handsomeguy, funny and bright and well-liked. Tra cy was, is, dull and homely, sulky and dirty-looking. Even whenshe'sclean,shelookssplotchy,dirty. Someofher problemsmi ghthavecomefrombeingrapedby UncleDerekforyears. UncleDerekwas Tracy'smother' syoungest brother, her favoritebrother, butwhenpeoplerealizedwhathehadbeendoing, the neighborhoodmengottogetherandsu ggestedhego live somewhere else. People didn't want him aroundtheirdaughters. Irrationalasusual, Tracy's motherblamed Tracyforhisexile, and forherown embarrassment. Not many girls in the neighborhood have babie sbefore they dragsome boy to my father and have himunite them in holy matrimony. But there was no marry Tracy, and no money for prenatal careoranabortion. And poor Amy, as she grew, looked more and or elike Tracy: scrawny and splochy with sparse, stringy hair. I don't think she'll eve rbe pretty.

Tracy'smatemalinstinctsdidn'tkickin,andIdoubt thathermotherChristmasDunnhasany.TheDunn family has a reputation forcraziness. There are sixteen of them living in the Dunnhouse, and at least a third are nuts. Amy isn't crazy, though. Not yet. She's neglected and lonely, and like any little kid left on her own too much, she finds ways to amuse herself.

I've never seenanyone hit Amy or curseheroranythinglikethat. The Dunnsdocare what peoplethink of them. But no one paysa ny attention to her, either. Shespendsmost of her time playing alone in the dirt. She also eats the dirt and what evershe finds in it, includin gbugs. But not long ago, just out of curiosity, I took her to our hous e, spongedher off, taughther the alphabet, and showed her how to write her name. She loved it. She's got a hun gry, able little mind, and she loves attention.

Tonight I askedCory if Amy could start schoolearly. Cory doesn't takekidsuntil they're five or close to five, but she saidshe'd let Amy in ifI would take charge of her. I expected that, though I don't like it. I help with the five and six year olds, anyway. I'vebeentakingcareoflittlekidssinceIwasone,andI'm tired of it. I think, though, that if someoned oesn'thelpAmynow,somedayshe'lldosomethingalotworse tha nburningdo wn her family'sgarage.

.

Parable of the Sower

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 19,

2025

Some cousins of old Mrs. Sims have inheritedher house. They'relucky there'sstill a house to inherit. Ifit weren'tforourwall,thehousewouldhavebeengutted, taken ove rby squatters,ortorchedassoonasitwas empty. Asitwas, allpeopledidwastakeback thing sthey had given to Mrs. Sims after shewasrobbed, and take whateverfoodshehadinthehouse. N osense letting it rot. We didn't take herfurnitureorherrugsorherapplia nces. We couldhave, but we didn't. We aren't thieves.

Wardell Parrish and Rosalee Payne think otherwise. They'rebothsmall, rust-brown, sour-looking people like Mrs. Sims. They're the childre nof a first cousin that Mrs. Sims had managed to keep contact and good relations with. He's a widower twice over, no kids, and she's been widowed once, seven kids. They'ren ot only brother and sister, but twins. May be that helps them get along with each other. They damn sure won't get along with anyone else.

They'removing in today. They've been here a couple of times before to lookthe place over, and I guess they must have likedit better than theirparents'house. Theysharedthatwith 18 other people. Iwasbusyinthe denwithmyclassofyounger school kid s, so I didn't meet themuntil today, though I've heard Dad talking to them-- heard them sit in our living room and insinuate that wehad cleaned out Mrs. Sims'shousebefore they arrived.Dadkepthistemper."Youknowshewasrobbed duringthe monthbeforeshedied, "hesaid."Youcan checkwiththepoliceaboutthat--ifyouhaven'talrea dy. Since then the community has protected the house. We haven't used it or stripped it. If you choose to live among us, you should understand that. We help each other, andwe don't steal."

"I wouldn't expect you to say you did," Wardell

Parrishmuttered.

Hissisterjumpedin before he couldsay more.

"We're not accusing anyone of anything," she lied.

"Wejustwondered....WeknewCousinMarjorie hadsomenicethings--jewelrythatsheinheritedfrom herm o ther. . . Very valuable. ...

"Checkwiththepolice,"myfathersaid.

"Well, yes, Iknow, but. . . ."

"This is a small community," myfather said. "We allknoweachotherhere. Wedependoneachother." Therewa sasilence. Perhapsthetwinsweregetting themessage.

"We're not very social," Wardell Parrish said. "Wemindourownbusiness."

Againhissisterjumpedinbeforehecouldgoon.

"I'm sure everything will be allright," she said. "I'm sure we'll get along fine."

I didn't like them when I heard them. I liked them even less whenI met them. They look atusas thoughwe smell and they don't. Of course, it doesn't matter whether I like themornot. There are other people in then eighborhood whom I don't like. But I don't trust the Payne-Parrishes. The kids seem all right, but the adults. . . . I wouldn't want to have to depend on them. Not even for little things.

Payne and Parrish. What perfect namesthey have.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 2025

We ran into a pack of feraldogstoday. We went to the hills today for target practice--me, my father, Joa nneGarfield, hercousinand boyfriend Harold--Harry-- Balter, my boyfriend Curtis Talcott, his brother Michael, Aura Mossandherbrother Peter. Our other adult guardian was Joanne's father Jay. He's agood guyanda goodshot. Dadlikestowork with him, although sometimes there are problems. The Garfields and the Balters are white, and the rest of usare black. That can be danger ous these days. On the street, people are expected to fear and hate every one but their own kind, but with all of us armed and watchful, people stared, but they let us alo ne. Our neighborhood is too small for us to play those kindsofgames.

Everything wentasusual at first. The Talcotts got into an argument first with each other, then with the Mosses. The Mossesare always blaming other people for whatever they do wrong, so they tend to have disputes outstanding with most of us. Peter Moss is the worst because he's always tryingto belikehis father, and his father is atotal shit. His father has three wives. All at once. Karen, Natalie, and Zahra. They've all got kid sby him, though so far, Zahra, the youngest and prettiest, only has one. Karenisthe one with the marriage license, but she let him get away with bringingin first one, thenanothernewwomanintothehousea ndcallingthemhis wives. I guess the way thing sare, she didn't thinkshecouldmakeitonherownwiththreekidswhe nhe brought in Natalie and five by the time hefoundZah ra.

TheMossesdon'tcometochurch.RichardMoss hasputtogetherhisownreligion--acombination of theOld TestamentandhistoricalWestAfricanpra ctices. He claimsthat God wants men to be patriarchs, rulers and protectors of women, and fathers of asmany children aspossible. He's an engineer for one of the big commercial water companies, so he can afford to pick up be autiful, young homeless women and live with them in polygynous relationships. He could pick up twenty women like that if he could afford to feed them. Ihearthere'salotofthatkindofthinggoingonin otherneighbor hoods. Some middle classmen prove they're men by having a lot of wives in tempo raryor permanentrelation ships. Some upper classmen prove they're men by having one wife and a lot of beautiful, disposable youngse rvantgirls. Nasty. When the girlsget pregnant, if their richemployers won't protect them, the employers' wives throw them out to starve.

Is that the way it's going to be, I wonder? Is that the future: Large numbers of people stuck in either President-elect Donner' sversion of slavery or Richard Moss's.

WerodeourbikestothetopofRiverStreetpastthe lastneighborhoodwalls,pastthelastragged,unwalled houses, past the last stretch ofb rokenasphaltandragandstickshacksofsquattersand streetpoorwhostareatusintheirh orrible,empty way,andthenhigherintothehillsalongadirtroad. Atlastwedismountedandwalkedourbikesdown thenarrowtrailintooneofthecanyonsthatweandothers use for target pra ctice. It lookedall right this time, but we alwayshave to be careful. People usecanyonsfor a lot of things. If we findcorpsesin one, westay away from it for a while. Dad triestoshieldusfromwhatgoesonintheworld,buthecan't.Knowing that, he also tries to teach us to shield ourselves.

Most of us havepracticed at homewith BB guns onhomemadetargetsoronsquirrelandbirdtargets. I've done all that. My aim is good, but I don't like it withthebirdsandsquirrels. Dadwastheonewho insistedonmy learningtoshootthem. Hesaidmoving targets would begood for my aim. I think there wasm ore to it than that. I think he wanted toseewhetherornotIcoulddoit--whethershootinga birdorasquirrelwouldtriggermy hyperempathy.

It didn't, quite. I didn't like it, but it wasn't painful. It felt like a big,soft,strange ghostblow, likegetting hit with a huge ball of air, but with no coolness, no feeling of wind. The blow, though still soft, was a littleharderwithsquirrelsandsometimesratsthanwith birds. All three had to be killed, though. They ate our foodo rruined it. Tree-cropswere theirspecialvictims: Peaches, plums, figs, persimmons, nuts....Andcrops likestrawberries, blackberries, grapes. . . . Whatever we planted, if they could get atit,theywould.Birdsareparticularpestsbecausethey can fly in, ye tI like them. I envy their ability to fly. Sometimes I get up and go out at dawn just so I can watch them without anyone scaring them orshootingthem.NowthatI'moldenoughtogotargetsho oting on Saturdays, I don't intend to shoot anymorebirds,nomatterwhatDadsays.Besides,just becauseIcanshootabi rdorasquirreldoesn't meanIcouldshootaperson--athiefliketheoneswho robbed Mrs. Sims. I don't kno wwhether I could do that. And if I did it, I don't knowwhat would happen to me. Would I die?

It'smy father's fault that we pay so muchattention toguns and shooting. He carries an inemillimeter automatic pi stol wheneve rhe leaves the neighborhood. He carries it on his hip where people can see it. He says that discoura ges mistakes. Armed people do get killed--m ost often in cross fires or by snipers--but unarmed people get killed a lot more often.

Dadalsohasasilencedninemillimetersubmachinegun. It stays at home with Cory in cas esomethinghappens therewhilehe'saway.Bothgunsare German--Heckler&Koch.Dadhasneversaid wherehegotthesubmachineg un.It'sillegal,ofcou rse, so I don't blame him. It must have cost a hell of a lot. He's only had it away from home a few times so he, Cory, and I could get the feel of it. He'll do thesamefortheboyswhenthey'reolder.

CoryhasanoldSmith&Wesson.38revolverthat she'sgoodwith.She'shaditsincebeforeshemarried Dad. She loaned that one to me today. Ours aren't the best or then ewest guns in theneighborhood,buttheyallwork. DadandCorykeepthem in good con dition. I have to help with that now.Andtheyspendthenecessarytime onpracticeand money on ammunition.

At neighborhood associationmeetings, Dadusedtopushtheadultsofeveryhouseholdtoownweapons, maintain them, an dknowhow to use them. "Know how touse them so well," he's said more than once,

"that you're asable to defend yourself at two a.m. as you are at two p.m."

Atfirsttherewereafewneighborswhodidn'tlike that--olderoneswhosaiditwasthejobofthepoliceto protect them, youngero neswhoworried that theirlittlechildrenwouldfindtheirguns,andreligious oneswhodidn'tthinka ministerofthegospelshould needguns. This was severally earsago.

"The police," my father told them, "may be able to avenge you, but they can't protect you. Thingsare getting worse. And as for yourchildren. . . . Well, yes, there isrisk. But you can put yourgunsout oftheirre achwhilethey'reveryyoung,andtrainthemas they gro wolder. That'swhat I mean to do. I believe they'll have a betterchance ofgrowing up if you canprotect them." He paused,staredat the people, then went on. "I have a wife and five children," he said. "I will pray for them all. I'll also see to it that they know how to defend themselves. And for as longas I can, I will stand betweenmy family and any intruder." He paused again. "Now that's what I have to do. You all do what you have to do."

By now there are at least two guns in every household. Dadsayshesuspects that some of them are so wellhid den--like Mrs. Sims's gun--that they wouldn't be available in a nemergency. He's working on that.

Allthekidswhoattendschoolatourhousegetgun handlinginstruction. Oncethey'vepassedthatandturned fifteen, twoo rthree of the neighborhoodadultsbegintakingthemtothehillsfortarget practice. It'sakindofriteof passageforus. My brother Keithhasbeen whiningtogoalong whenever some onegets a shooting group together, but the age rul eis firm.

IworryaboutthewayKeithwantstogethishands ontheguns.Daddoesn'tseemtoworry,butIdo. Therearealway safewgroupsofhomelesspeople andpacksofferaldogslivingoutbeyondthelast hillsideshacks.Peopleanddogs huntrabbits,possum s, squirrels, and each other. Both scavengewhateverdies.Thedogsusedtobelongtopeo ple-- ortheirancestorsdid.Butdogseatmeat.These days,nopoorormiddleclasspersonwhohadan ediblepiece ofmeatwouldgiveittoadog.Rich peoplestillkeepdogs,eitherbecausetheylikethem orbecausetheyusethemto guardestates, enclaves, and businesses. The richhave plenty of other security devices, but the dogs are extra insurance. Dogsscare people.

I did some shooting today, and I was leaningagainst a boulder, watching others shoot, when I realized therewas adognear by, watching me. Justone dog--male, yellow-brown, sharp-eared, short-haired. He wasn't big enough to make a meal of me, and I still had the Smith & Wesson, so while he was looking me over, I took a good lookat him. He was lean, but he didn't lookstarved. He looked alert and curious. Hesniffed the air, and I remembered that dogs were supposed to be oriented more towards cent than sight.

"Look at that," I said to Joanne Garfieldwho wasstandingnearby.

She turned, gasped, and jerked hergunupto aim at the dog. The dog vanished into the dry brush and boulders. Turning, Joanne tried to look everywhereasthoughsheexpected to seem ore dogsstalking us, but there was nothing. She was shaking.

"I'm sorry," I said. "I didn't knowyou were afraid of them."

Shedrewadeepbreathandlookedattheplace wherethedoghadbeen."Ididn'tknowIwaseither," shewhispe red."I'veneverbeensoclosetoonebefore. I. . . I wish I had gotten a better lookat it."

At that moment, Aura Moss screamedand firedherfather's Llamaautomatic.

Ipushedawayfromtheboulderandturnedtosee

Aurapointingherguntowardsomerocksand

babbling.

"Itwasoverthere!"shesaid,herwordstumbling overoneanother."Itwassomekindofanimal--dirtyyellow with big teeth. It had its mouth open. It was huge!"

"You stupid bitch, you almostshot me!" Michael Talcottshouted. I could see now that he had ducked down behind aboulder. He would have been in Aura's line of fire, but he didn't seem to behurt.

"Put your gun away, Aura," my father said. Hekepthisvoicelow, buthewasangry. Icouldseethat, whether Auracouldornot.

"It was an animal," she insisted. "A big one. It mightstillbearound."

"Aura!"Myfatherraisedhisvoiceandhardenedit.Aura loo ked at him, thenseemed to realize that shehadmo rethanadogtoworryabout.Shelookedatthe gun in her hand, frowned, fumbled it safe, and putitbackintoher holster.

"Mike?" my father said.

away."

"I'm okay," MichaelTalcott said. "No thanks to her!"

"It wasn't my fault," Aura said, right oncue. "There was an animal. It could have killed you! It wassneakin guponus!"

"Ithinkitwasjustadog,"Isaid."Therewasonewatchingu soverhere. Joanne movedand it ran

"You should have killed it," Peter Moss said. "What do you want to do? Wait until it jumps someone."

"Whatwasitdoing?" JayGarfieldasked. "Just watching?"

"That's all," I said. "It didn't look sickorstarved. Itwasn'tverybig.Idon'tthinkitwasadangerto anyonehere. Therearetoomanyofus,andwe'reall too big."

"ThethingIsawwashuge," Aurainsisted. "Ithadits mouthopen!"

IwentovertoherbecauseI'dhadasuddenthought.

"It was panting," I said. "They pant when they're hot. It doesn't meanthey're angry or hungry." I hesitated, watching her. "You've neverseenonebefore, haveyou?"

Sheshookherhead.

"They'rebold, but they're not dangerousto a group like this. You don't have to worry."

Shedidn'tlookasthoughshequitebelievedme,but sheseemedtorelaxalittle.TheMossgirlswereboth bullied an d sheltered. They were alm ost neverallowedtoleavethewallsoftheneighborhood. They wereeducatedat homebytheirmothersaccording tothereligiontheirfatherhadassembled,andthey were warnedaway from the sinand contamination of the rest of the world. I'm surprised that Aura was allowed to come to us for gunhandling instruction and target practice. Ihope it will be good for her-- and Ihope the rest of us will survive.

"All of you stay where you are," Dad said. He glanced at Jay Garfield, then went a short way upamong therocksandscruboakstoseewhether Aurahadshotanything. Hekepthisguninhishandand the safety off. He was out of ou rsight for no more than aminute.

HecamebackwithalookonhisfacethatIcouldn'tread. "Put your gunsa way," he said. "We're going home."

"Did I kill it?" Aura demanded.

"No.Getyourbikes."HeandJayGarfieldwhispered togetherforamoment,andJayGarfieldsighed. JoanneandI watchedthem,wondering,knowingwewouldn't hear anything from them until they were ready to tell us.

"Thisisnotaboutadeaddog,"HaroldBaltersaid behindus.Joannemovedbacktostandbesidehim.

"It'sabouteitheradogpackorahumanpack,"I said,"ormaybeit'sacorpse."

It was, as I found out later, a family of corpses: A woman, a little boy of about four years, and a just-born infant, all partly eaten. But Dad didn't tell me that until we got home. At the canyon, all we kne wwas that he wasupset.

"Iftherewereacorpsearoundhere, we would have smelled it," Harrysaid.

"Not if it were fresh," I countered.

Joannelookedatmeandsighedthewayherfathersighs. "If it's that ,I wonder where we'll goshooting next time. I wonder when there'll be anext time." Peter Moss and the Talcott brothershad gotten intoanarg umentoverwhosefaultitwasthatAurahad almostshotMichael,andDadhadtobreakitup. Then Dad che cked with Aura tosee that she was all right. He said a few things to her that I couldn't hear,andIsawatearslided ownherface. Shecrieseasily. She always has.

Dadwalkedawayfromherlookingharassed. Heledus up thep ath out of the canyon. We walkedourbikes, andweallkeptlookingaround. We could see now that there were other dogsnear by. We were being watched by bigpack. Jay Garfield brought up therear, guarding our backs.

"Hesaidweshouldsticktogether, "Joannetoldme. Shehadseenmelookingbackatherfather.

"You and I?"

"Yeah, and Harry. Hesaid we should lookout for oneanother."

"Idon'tthinkthesedogsarestupidenoughorhungryenough to attacku sin daylight. They'll go after some lone street person tonight."

"Shut up, for godsake."

Theroadwasnarrowgoingupandoutofthecanyo n. It would have been a bad place to have to fight off dogs. Someonecould trip andstep off the crumblingedge. Someone couldbeknocked off the edge by a dogorby one ofus. That wouldmean falling several hundred feet.

Downbelow, I could hear dogs fighting now. We may have been close to their densor what ever they lived in. I thought may be we were just close to what they were feeding on.

"If theycome," myfathersaid in a quiet, even voice,

"Freeze, aim, and fire. That willsave you. Nothing elsewill. Freeze, aim, and fire. Keep youreyesopen and stay calm."

Ireplayedthewordsinmymindaswewentupthe switchbacks.NodoubtDadwantedustoreplaythem. I could see that Aura wa sstill leaking tearsandsmearingandstreakingherfacewithdirtlikea littlekid.Shewastoowra ppedupinherownmiseryand fear to be of muchu se.

We got almost to the top beforeanything happened. We were beginning to relax, I think. I hadn't seen a dog for a while. Then, from the front of our line, we heard three shots.

We all froze, most of us unable to seewhat hadhappened.

"Keep moving," my father called. "It's all right. It was just one doggetting too close."

"Are you okay?" I called.

"Yes," he said. "Just come onand keep youreyesopen."

One by one, we cameabreast of the dog that hadbeenshotandwalkedpastit. It was a bigger, grayer animal than the one I had seen. There was a beauty to it . It looked like pictures I had seen of wolves. It was wedged again stahanging boulder just a few steps up the steep can you wall from us.

It moved.

I saw its bloody woundsas it twisted. I bit mytongue as the pain I knew it must feel became my pain. What to do? Keepwalking? I couldn't. One more step and I would fall and lie in the dirt, helpless against the pain. Or I might fall into the canyon.

"It's still alive," Joannesaid behindme. "It's moving." Itsforefeet were making little running motions, itscla wsscrapingagainsttherock.

I thought I would throw up. My belly hurt more and moreuntil I felt skewered through the middle. I leanedonmy bikewith my left arm. With my right hand, I drewthe Smith & Wesson, aimed, and shotthe beautifuldogthroughitshead.

I feltthe impact of the bullet as ahard, solid blow-- something beyond pain. ThenI felt the dog die. Isawit jerk,shudder,stretchitsbodylong,then freeze. I saw it die. I felt it die. It went out like a match in a sudden vanishing of pain. Its life flared up, then went out. I went a little numb. Without thebike, Iwouldhavecollapsed.

Peoplehadcrowdedclosebeforeandbehindme.I

heard them before I could see them clearly. "It's dead," I heardJoanne say. "Poor thing." "What?" my father demanded. "Another one?" I managed to focus on him. He must have skirted close to the cliff-edge of the roadto have gotten all the waybacktous. And hemust haverun. "Thesameone," Isaid, managing to straightenup. "It wasn't dead. We saw it moving." "I put three bulletsinto it," hesaid. "It was moving, ReverendOlamina," Joanne insisted. "It was suffering. If Laurenhadn't shot it, someoneel sewouldhavehadto." Dadsighed. "Well, it isn't suffering now. Let'sget outofhere." Thenheseemedtorealizewhat Joannehad said. He loo kedat me. "Are you all right?" I nodded. I don't knowhow I looked. No one was reacting to me as though I lookedodd, so I must not haveshownmuchofwhatIhadgonethrough. Ithink only Harry Balter, Curti sTalcott, and Joanne had seen me shoot the dog. I looked at themand Curtisgrinnedatme. Heleanedagainsthis bikeand in a slow, lazy motion, he drewanimaginary gun, took careful aim at the dead dog, and firedanimaginary shot. "Pow," he said. "Just likeshedoesstuff like that every day. Pow!" "Let's go," My father said. We began walking up the path again. We left the canyonand made our way down to the street. There werenomoredogs. I walked, then rodein a daze, still not quite free of the dog I had killed. I had felt it die, and yetI had not died. I had felt its pain as though it were a human being. I had felt its life flare and go out, and I was still alive. Pow.

5

Belief

Initiatesandguidesaction--Or it doesn othing.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SUNDAY, MARCH 2, 2025

It'sraining.

Weheardlastnightontheradiothattherewasastor msweepingin from the Pacific, but most people didn't believe it. "We'll have wind," Cory said. "Wind andmaybeafewdropsofrain,ormaybejustalittle coolweather. Thatwouldbewelcome. It's allwe'llget."

That's all there has been for six years. Ican remember therain six years ago, waters wirling around the backporch, nothighen oughtocome into the house, but high enough to attract my brothers who wanted to play in it. Cory, for ever worried about infection, wouldn't let them. She said they'd be splashing around in a soup of all the waste-water germs we'd be enwatering our gardens with for years. Maybe she was right, but kidsall overtheneighborhoodcoveredthemselveswithmudand earthwormsthatday, and nothing terrible happened to them.

Butthatstormwasalmosttropical--aquick,hard, warm,Septemberrain,theedgeofahurricanethathit Mexi co's Pacificcoast. Thisisacolder, winterstorm.Itbeganthismorningaspeoplewerecomingto church.

Inthechoirwesangrousingoldhymns accompaniedbyCory'spianoplayingandlightning andthunderfromoutsi de.Itwaswonderful.Somepeople missedp art of the sermon, though, because they went home to put out all the barrels, buckets, tubs, andpots they could find to catch the free water. Others went home to put potsand bucketsinsidewheretherewereleaksintheroof.

I can't rememberwhen any of ushave had a roofrepairedbyaprofessional. WeallhaveSpanishtileroofs, and that'sgood. A tile roof is, I suspect, more secureandlastingthanwoodorasphaltshingles. Buttime, wind, and earthquakeshavetakenatoll. Tree limb shavedonesomedamage, too. Yet noonehasextramoneyforanythinga snonessential asroofrepair. Atbest, someofthen eighborhood mengoupwithwhatevermaterials they can scavenge and cre ate makeshift patches. No one's even done that forawhile. If it only rains once every six or seven years, why bother?

Ourroofisallrightsofar, and the barrels and things we put out after services this morning are full or filling. Good, clean, free water from the sky. If only it came more often.

MONDAY, MARCH 3, 2025

Still raining.

No thunder today, though there was some last night. Steadydrizzle, and occasional, heavy showers allday. All day. So different and beautiful. I've never felt so overwhelmed by water. I went out an dwalked in the rainuntill was soaked. Corydidn't want meto, but I did it anyway. I twas sowonderful. How can shenotunderstandthat?Itwassoincredibleand wonderful.

TUESDAY, MARCH 4, 2025

AmyDunnisdead.

Threeyearsold,unloved,anddead. Thatdoesn't seemreasonableorevenpossible. She could read simple words and count to thirty. I taught her. She so much loved getting attention that she stuck to meduring school hours and drove mecrazy. Didn't want me to go to the bathroom without her.

Dead.

Ihadgottentolikeher, eventhoughshewasapest. Today Iwalkedherhomeafterclass. Ihadgotten intothehabitof walkingherhomebecausethe Dunnswouldn't sendanyoneforher.

"Sheknowstheway, "Christmassaid." Justsendher ove r. She'll get here all right."

I didn't doubt that shecould have. She could look across the street, and across the center island, and see her house from ours, but Amy had a tendency to wander. Sent home alone, she might get there or shemig htwindupinthe Montoyagarden, grazing, or in the Moss rabbit house, trying to let the rabbits out. So Iwalked heracross, gladforanexcusetoget out in the rain again. Amy loved it, too, and we lingeredforamoment under the bigavocado tree on the island. There was an avelorange tree at the backend of the island, and I picked apair of ripe

oranges--oneforAmyandoneforme.Ipeeledboth

of them, and we ate them while the rainplastered Amy's scantcolorless hair against her head and made her look bald.

I took her to her door and left her in thecare of hermother.

"You didn't have to get her so wet," Tracycomplained.

"Might as well enjoy the rainwhile it lasts," I said, and I left them.

I saw Tracy take Amy into the houseand shut thedoor. Yetsomehow Amywound upoutside again, wound upnear the front gate, just opposite the Garfield/Balter/Doryhouse. Jay Garfield found her there when he came out to investigate what he thoughtwas another bundle that some one had thrown over the gate. People toss us things sometimes -- gifts of envy and hate: A maggoty, dead animal, a bag of shit, even an occasional seve redhuman limborade adchild. De adadult shave been left lying just beyond ou rwall. But these were all outside rs. Amy was one of us.

Someoneshot Amy right through the metalgate. Ithadtobeanaccidentalhitbecauseyoucan'tsee throughour gatefromtheoutside. The shootereither fired at someon ewho was in front of the gate or fired at the gate itself, at the neighborhood, at usandoursupposedwealth and privilege. Most bullets wouldn't have gotten through the gate. It's supposed to be bulletproof. But it's been penetrated a couple of times before, highup, near the top. Nowwehavesix newbulletholesinthelowerportion--sixholesand a seventh dent, a long, smooth gaug ewhere a bullet had glanced off without breaking through.

We hear so much gunfire, day and night, singleshotsandoddburstsofautomaticweaponsfire, even occasional blasts from heavy artillery or explosionsfromgrenadesorbiggerbombs. Weworry most about those last thing s, but they're rare. It'shardertosteal bigweapons, and not many people around here can afford to buy theil legal ones--orthat'swhatDadsays. Thethingis, we heargunfir eso much that we don't hear it. A couple of the Balter kidssaid they heard shooting, but as usual, they paid no attention to it. It was outside, beyond the wall, after all. Most of us heard nothing except therain.

Amy wasgoing to turn four inacouple of weeks. I had planned to give her a little party with mykinderg artners.

God, I hate this place.

I mean, I love it. It's home. Theseare my people. ButIhateit.It'slikeanislandsurroundedbysharks-- except thatsharksdon'tbotheryouunlessyougointhe water. But our land shark sare on theirway in.

It's just a matter of how long it takes for them to gethungryenough.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 2025

I walked in the rain again thismorning. It wascold, but good. Amy has already been cremated. I wonder if her mother isrelieved. She doesn't lookrelieved. She never likedAmy, but now she cries. I don't think she'sfaking,Thefamilyhasspentmoneyitcould not afford to get the police involved to try to find the killer. I suspect that the only good this will do will be tochaseawaythepeoplewholiveonthesidewalks and streets nearest too urwall. Is that good? The street poor will be back, and they won't love us for sicking the cops on them. It's illegal to campout on the street the way they do-- theway they must-- so the cops knock them around, rob them if they have anything worth stea ling, thenorder them away or jail them. The miserable will be made even moremiserable. Noneofthat can help Amy. Is suppose, though, that it will make the Dunns feel better about the way they treated her.

On Saturday, Dad will preach Amy's funeral. I wish I didn't have to be there. Funeralshave never bothered me before, but this one does.

"You cared about Amy," JoanneGarfield said to mewhenIcomplainedtoher. Wehadlunchtogethertoday. We ate in my bedro om because it'sstill rainingoffandon,andtherestofthehousewasfull ofallthekidswhohadn'tgonehometoeatlunch.But my room is still mine. It's the one place in theworldwhereIcangoandnotbefollowedbyanyoneI don't invite in. I' mthe only person I know who has a bedroom to herself. Thesedays, even Dad andCory knock before they open my door. That's one of the best thingsabout being theonly daughterin the family. I haveto kick my brothers out of hereall the time, but at least I can kick them out. Joanne is anonlychild,butshesharesaroom withthreeyounger girlcousins--whinyLisa,alwaysdemandingandcompl aining, smart, giggly Robinwith her near-genius I.Q., and invisible Jessica who whispers and stares at her feet and criesify ougive heradirty look. All three are Balters--Harry's sisters and the children of Joanne's mother's sister. The two adult sisters, their husbands, their eightchildren, and their parents Mr. and Mrs. Doryare all squeezed into one five-bedroomh ouse. It isn't the most crowded house in the neighborhood, but I'm glad I don't have to live like that.

"Almost no onecared about Amy," Joannesaid. "But you did."

"After the fire, I did,"I said. "I got scared for her then. Before that, I ignoredher likeeveryoneelse."

"So now you're feelingguilty?"

"No."

"Yes, you are."

I looked at her, surprised. "I mean it. No. I hate that she's dead, and I missher, but I didn't cause her death. I just can't deny what all thi ssays about us."

"What?"

I felt on the verge of talking to her about thingsI hadn't talked about before. I'd written about them. Sometimes I write to keep from goingcrazy. There's a world of things I don't feel freeto talk to anyone about.

ButJoanneisafriend. Sheknowsmebetterthanmost people, and she has abrain. Why not talk to her? Soone r or later, I have to talk to someone.

[&]quot;What'swrong?"sheasked.Shehadopeneda plasticcontainerofbeansalad.Nowsheputitdownon my night table.

"Don't you everwonder if maybe Amy and Mrs. Sims are the lucky ones?" I asked. "I mean, don't you everwonderwhat'sgoingtohappentotherestofus." Therewasaclapofdull,muffledthunder,anda suddenheavy shower.Radioweatherreportssaytoday's rain will be the last of the four-dayserie sof storms. I hope not. "Sure I think about it," Joanne said. "With people shooting little kids, how can I not think about it?" "Peoplehavebeenkillinglittlekidssincethere've beenpeople,"Isaid. "Not in here, they haven't. Not until now." "Yes, that's it, isn't it. We got a wake-upcall. Another one." "What are you talkingabout?" "Amy was the first of us to bekilled like that. She won't be the last." Joannesighed, and there was a little shudder in the sigh. "So you think so, too." "I do. ButI didn't know you thought about it at all." "Rape, robbery, and now murder. Of course I think about it. Everyone thinks about it. Everyone worries. I wish I could get out of here." "Wherewouldyougo?"

"That's it, isn't it? There's nowhere to go."

"There might be."

"Not if you don't have money. Not if all you know how to doistakecare of babiesandcook."

I shook my head. "You know much more thanthat."

"Maybe, but none of it matters. I won't beable to afford college. I won't beable to get a job ormoveoutof myparents'housebecausenojobIcouldget wouldsupportmeandtherearenosafeplacestomove. Hell, my parents are still livin gwith their parents."

"I know," I said. "And asbad as that is, there's more."

"Whoneedsmore? That's enough! "She began to eat the bean salad. It looke dgood, but I thought I might be about to ruinit for her.

"There'scholeraspreadinginsouthernMississippiand Louisiana," I said. "I heard about it on the radio yesterd ay. There are too many poorpeople-- illiterate, jobless, homeless, without decent sanitationorclea nwater. They have plenty of water down there, but a lot of it is polluted. And you knowthatdrugthatmake speoplewanttosetfires?"

Shenodded, chewing.

"It'sspreadingagain.Itwasontheeastcoast.Nowit's in Chi cago. The reportssay that it makes watching a firebetter than sex. I don't knowwhetherthereportersarecondemningitoradvertisingit."I drewadeepbreath. "Tornadoesaresmashinghellout of Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, and two or threeotherstates.Threehun dredpeopledeadso far.Andthere'sablizzardfreezingthenorthern midwest,killingevenmorepeople.InNewYo rkand NewJersey,ameaslesepidemiciskillingpeople. Measles!"

"I heard about the measles," Joanne said. "Strange. Even if people can't afford immunizations, measles shouldn't kill."

"Those peopleare half dead already," I told her.

"They've come through the wintercold, hungry, already sick with other diseases. And, no, of course they can't afford immunizations. We're lucky our parents found the money to pay for all our immunizations. If we havekids, I don't see how we'll be able to do even that for them.

"Iknow, Iknow." She sounded almost bored.

"Thingsarebad. Mymotherishopingthisnewguy, President Don ner, will start to get us back tonormal."

"Normal," I muttered. "I wonderwhat that is. Do you agreewith yourmother?"

"No. Donnerhasn't got a chance. I think he would fix things if he could, but Harry says his ideas are scary. Harrysayshe'llsetthecountrybackahundred years."

"My fathersayssomething like that. I'msurprised that Harry agrees."

"Hewould. Hisownfatherthinks Donneris God. Harry wouldn't agre ewith him on anything."

Ilaughed, distracted, thinking about Harry's battles with his father. Neighborhood fireworks--plenty of flash, but no real fire.

"Why do you want to talk about this stuff," Joanneasked, bringing meback to the real fire. "We can't do anything about it."

"We have to."

"Havetowhat?We're15!Whatcanwedo?"

"Wecangetready. That's what we've got to do now.

Get ready for what'sgoingto happen, get ready to survive it, get ready to make a life afterward. Getfocu sedonarrangingtosurvivesothatwecandomore tha njust get battedaround by crazy people,desperatepeo ple,thugs,andleaderswhodon'tkno wwhat they're doing!"

She just stared at me. "I don't knowwhat you're talking about."

I was rolling-- too fast, maybe. "I'm talking about this place, Jo, this cul-de-sacwith a wall around it. I'm talkingaboutthedayabiggangofthosehungry, desperate, crazypeopleoutsidedecidetocomein. I'm talking about what we've got to do before that happensso that we can survive and rebuild--orat least survive and scape to be something other than beggars."

"Someone'sgoingtojustsmashinourwalland comein?"

"More likely blast it down, orblast the gate open. It's going to happensomeday. You knowthat as well as I do."

"Oh, no I don't," she protested. She sat up straight, almoststiff, her lunch forgotten for the moment. I bit into a piece of acorn bread that was full of dried fruit and nuts. It's a favorite of mine, but I managed toche wandswallowwithouttastingit.

"Jo, we're in for trouble. You've already admitted that."

"Sure, "shesaid." Moreshootings, morebreak-ins. That' swhat I meant."

"Andthat's what will happen for a while. I wish I could gues show long. We'll be hit and hit, then the big hit will come. And if we're not rea dy forit, it will be like Jericho."

Sheheldherselfrigid, rejecting. "Youdon'tknowthat! You can't rea dthe future. Noone can."

"You can," I said, "if you want to. It's scary, but once you get past the fear, it'seasy. In L.A. some walled communitiesbiggerandstrongerthanthisonejustaren't there any more. Nothing left but ruins, rats, and squatters. Whathappened to the mean happened us. We'll die inh ereunlesswe get busy nowand workout waystosurvive."

"If you think that, why don't you tell your parents? Warn them and seewhat they say."

"I intend to as soonas I think of a way to do it that will reach them. Besides. . . .Ithink they already know. I think my father does, anyway. I think most of the adultsknow. They don't want to know, but they do."

"MymothercouldberightaboutDonner.Hereally coulddosomegood."

"No.No,Donner's justakindofhuman banister."

"A what?"

"I mean he's like. . .like a symbol of the past for us to hold on to as we're pushed into the future. He's nothing. Nosubstance. But having him there, the latest in a two-and-a-half-century-long line of American presidents make speople feel that the country, the culture that they grewup with is still here--thatwe'llgetthroughthesebadtimesandback to normal."

"Wecould," shesaid. "Wemight. Ithinksomeday wewill. "No, shedidn't. Shewastoobrighttotakeanything but the most superficial comfort from her denial. But even superficial comfort is better than none, I guess. I tried another tactic.

"Didyoueverreadaboutbubonicplagueinmedieval Europe?" I asked.

She nodded. She reads a lot the way I do, reads all kinds of things. "A lot of the continent was depo pulated," she said. "Some survivors thought theworldwascomingtoanend."

"Yes, but once they realized it wasn't, they also realized the rewas a lot of vacant land available for the taking, and if they had a trade, they realized they could demand betterpay for their work. A lot of things changed for the survivors."

"What'syour point?"

"The changes." I thought for a moment. "They were slowchangescomparedtoanythingthatmight happenhere, but it took aplaguetomakes ome of the people realize that things could change."

"So?"

"Thingsarechangingnow,too.Ouradultshaven't beenwipedoutbyaplaguesothey'restillanchored inthepast, waitingforthegoodolddaystocomeback. But things hav echanged a lot, and they'llchangemore. Thingsare alwayschanging. This is just one of the big jum ps instead of the little step-by-step changes that are easier to take. Peoplehave changed the climate of the world. Now they're waiting for the old days to come back."

"Yourfathersayshedoesn'tbelievepeoplechangedthe climate in spite of what scienti stssay. He saysonly Godcouldchangetheworldinsuchanimportant way."

"Do you believe him?"

She opened her mouth, looked at me, then closed it again. After a while, she said, "I don't know."

"Myfatherhashisblindspots," Isaid. "He'sthebest person Iknow, but even he hashisblindspots."

"It doesn't make any difference," she said. "We can't make theclimate change back, no matter why it changed in the first place. You and I can't. The neighborhoodcan't. We can't do anything."

Ilostpatience."Thenlet'skillourselvesnowandbedonewit hit!"

Shefrowned,herround,tooseriousfacealmostangry. She tore bit sof peel fromasmall navelorange."What then?"shedemanded."Whatcanwe do?"

I put the last bite of my acorn breaddownand wentaroundhertomynighttable. Itookseveralbooks from the dee pbottom drawerandshowed them toher. "This is what I've been doing--reading and studying the se over the past few months. These books are old like all the books in this house. I've also been using Dad's computer when he lets me--to get new stuff."

Frowning, shelooked themover. Threebooks on survival in the wilderness, three onguns and shooting, two each on handling medical emergencies, California native and naturalized plants and their uses, and basic living: log cabin-building, livestock raising, plant cultivation, soapmaking--thatkind of thing. Joannecaughton at once.

"What are you doing?" sheasked. "Trying to learn to live off the land?"

"I'm trying to learn whatever I can that might help me survive out there. I think we should all study books likethese. Ithinkweshouldburymoneyandothernecessities in the ground where thieves won't find them. I think we should make emergency packs--grabandrunpacks--incase we have to get out of here in ah u rry. Money, food, clothing, matches, a blanket. ... I think we should fix places outside where we can meet in case we get separated. Hell, I think a lot of things. And Iknow--Iknow!-- that no matter how many thin gsI think of, they won't be enough. Every time I go outside, I try to imagine what it might be like to live out therewithout walls, and I realize I don't know anything."

"Thenwhy--"

"I intend to survive." Shejuststared.

"I mean to learn everythingI can while I can," I said.

"If I find myself outside, maybe what I've learned willhelpmelivelongenoughtolearnmore."

Shegavemeanervoussmile."You'vebeenreadingtoo many adventure sto ries," she said.

Ifrowned. How could I reachher. "This isn't a joke, Jo."

"What is it then?" She ate the last section of her orange. "What do youwant me to say?"

"I want you to be serious. I realize I don't knowvery much. None ofusknows very much. But we can all learnmore. Thenwecanteachoneanother. Wecanstop denying reality or hopin git will go away bymagic."

"That's not what I'm doing." I lookedout for a moment at the rain, calming myself. "Okay.Okay, what are you doing?" She looked uncomfortable. "I'm still not sure we can really do anything." "Jo!" "Tell me what I candothat won't get me in troubleor make everyone think I'm crazy. Just tell mesomethi At last. "Have you read all your family'sbooks?" "Some of them. Not all. They aren't all worth reading. Books aren't goingto saveus." "Nothingisgoingto save us. If we don't save ourselves, we're dead. Now use your imagination. Is there anythingon your family bookshelves that mighthelpyouifyouwerestuckoutside?" "No." "You answer too fast. Go homeand lookagain. And like I said, use your imagination. Any kind of survival information from encyclopedias, biographies, anything that help syou learn to live off the land and defend ou rselves. Even some fiction mightbe useful." She gave me a sidelongglance. "I'll bet," she said. "Jo, if you never need thisinformation, it won't do you any harm. You'll just know little more than you did before. So what? By the way, do you take note swhenyouread?"

"Readthis." Ihandedheroneoftheplantbooks. Thisonewasabout California Indians, the plants they used, and h owthey used them--aninteresting, entertaining little book. She would be surprised. There was nothing in it to scare h erorthreatenher orpushher. Ithought I had already done en ough of that.

Guarded look. "Sometimes."

Page 37

"Take notes," I told her. "You'll remember better if you do."

"I still don't believe you," she said. "Thingsdon't have to be as bad as yousay they are."

I put the book into her hands. "Hang on to your notes," I said. "Pay special attention to the plantsthat growbetweenhereandthecoastandbetween hereandOregonalongthecoast. I'vemarkedthem."

"I said I don't believe you."

"I don't care."

Shelookeddownatthebook,ranherhandsover theblackcloth-and-cardboardbinding."Sowelearnto eat grass and live in the bush es," she muttered.

"We learn to survive," I said. "It's a good book. Take care of it. You know how my father isabout hisbooks."

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 2025

Therainstopped. Mywindows are on the northside of the house, and I can see the clouds breaking up. They're being blown over the mountains toward the desert. Surprising how fast they can move. The wind is strong and cold now. It might cost us a few trees.

Iwonderhowmanyyearsitwillbebeforewesee rainagain.

6

Drowningpeople Sometimesdie Fightingtheirrescuers.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, MARCH 8, 2025

Joannetold.

She told her mother who told her fatherwho told myfatherwhohadoneofthoseserioustalkswithme. Damnher. Damnher!

IsawhertodayattheservicewehadforAmyand yesterdayatschool.Shedidn'tsayawordabout whatshehadd one.Itturnsoutshetoldhermotheron Thu rsday. Maybe it was supposed to be a secret between them orsomething. But, oh, PhillidaGarfieldwassoconcernedforme, soworried. And shedidn'tlike myscaringJoanne. WasJoanne scared? Notscaredenoughtouseherbrain, it seems. Joannealwaysseemedsose nsible. Didshe thinkgettingmeintotroublewould make the danger go away? No, that 'sn ot it. This is just more denial: A dumb little game of "If we don't talk about bad things, maybe they won't happen." Idiot! I'll never be able to tell her anything important again.

What if I'd been more open. What if I'd talked religion with her? I'd wanted to. Howwill I ever be able to talk to anyone about that?

What I did say worked itsway back to me tonight. Mr. Garfield talked to Dad after the funeral. It was like the whisperinggame that little kids play. The message went all theway from, "We're in danger hereand we'regoing to have to work hard to save ourselves." to "Laurenistalking about running awaybecauseshe's afraidthatoutsidersaregoingtoriot andteardownthewallsandkillusall."

Well, I had saidsomeofthat, and Joannehad made it clear that she didn't agree with me. But I hadn't justletthebadpredictionsstandalone:"We'regoingtodie, boo-hoo." What would be the point of that? Still, only the negative stuff cam ehome to me.

"Lauren, what did yousay to Joanne?" my fatherdemanded. Hecametomyroomafterdinnerwhen heshouldhavebeendoinghisfinalworkon tomorrow'ssermon. Hesatdownonmyonechairand sta red at me in a way that meant, "Where isyourmind,girl? What's thematter with you?" That look plus Joanne's name told mew hathad happened, what this was about. My friend Joanne. Damnher!

I sat on my bed and lookedback at him. "I told her we were in forsomebad, dangeroustimes," I said. "I warnedherweoughttolearnwhatwecouldnowsowe coul dsurvive."

ThatwaswhenhetoldmehowupsetJoanne's motherwas,howupsetJoannewas,andhowtheyboth thought I needed to "talk to someone," because Ithoughtourworldwascomingtoanend.

"Doyouthinkourworldiscomingtoanend?" Dadasked, and with no warning at all, I almost started crying. I had all I could do to hold it back. What I thought was, "No, I thin kyourworld iscoming to an end, and maybe you with it." That was terrible. I hadn't thought about it in such a personalway before. I turnedand lookedout a windowuntil I felt calmer. When I faced him again, I said. "Yes. Don'tyou?"

He frowned. I don't think he expected me to say that.

"You're fifteen," he said. "You don't really understand what's going on here. The problems we have now have been building since long before you were born."

"I know."

Hewasstillfrowning. Iwondered what hewanted me to say. "What were you doing, then?" heasked.

"Why did you say those thingsto Joanne?"

I decided to go on telling the truth foraslongas Icould. I hate to lie to him. "What Isaid wastrue," Iinsisted.

"You don't have to say everythingyou think you know," he said. "Haven't you figured that out yet?"

"Joanne and I were friends," I said. "I thought I could talk to her."

Heshookhishead."Thesethingsfrightenpeople.It' sbest not to talkabout them."

"But, Dad, that's like. . .like ignoring a fire in thelivingroombecausewe'reallinthekitchen, and, besides, ho usefiresaretooscarytotalkabout."

"Don't warnJoanneorany of your other friends," hesaid. "Not now. Iknow you thinkyou're right, but you'renotdoinganyoneanygood. You'rejust panickingpeople."

Imanagedtosuppressasurgeofangerbyshiftingthe subject a little. Sometimes the way to move Dad istogoat himfromseveraldirections.

"Did Mr. Garfield give you back yourbook?" I asked.

"Whatbook?"

"IloanedJoanneabookaboutCaliforniaplantsandthe way Indians used them. It wasone of your books. I'm sorry I loaned it to her. It's so neutral, I didn't think it could cause trouble. But I guess it has." He lookedstartled, then he almost smiled. "Yes, I will have to have that one back, all right. Youwouldn'thavetheacornbreadyoulikesomuch withoutthatone --nottomentionafewotherthingswe take for granted."

"Acorn bread. . . ?"

He nodded. "Most of the people in thiscountry don't eat acorns, you know. They have no tradition of eating them, they don't knowhow to prepare them, and for some reason, they find the idea of eating them disgusting. Some of our neighbors wanted tocutdownallourbigliveoaktreesandplantsomethingu seful. You wouldn't believe the time Ihadchangingtheirminds."

"Whatdidpeopleeatbefore?"

"Breadmadeofwheatandothergrains--corn,rye,oat s. . .thingslike that."

"Too expensive!"

"Didn'tusetobe. YougetthatbookbackfromJoanne." Hed rewa deep breath. "Now, let's get offthesidetrac kandbackontothemaintrack. What were you planning? Did you try to talk Joanne intorunningaway?"

Then I sighed. "Of course not."

"Her fathersaysyou did."

"He'swrong. This was about staying alive, learning to live outside so that we'db eable to if we ever had to."

Hewatchedmeasthoughhecouldreadthetruthinmy mind. When I was little, I used to think he could.

"All right," he said. "You may have meant well, but no more scare talk."

I thought he would yell at me or punish me. His voice had had that warning edge to it that my brothersan d I had come to call the rattle--asinarattlesnake's warningsound. If you pushed him past the rattle, you were in trouble. If he called you "son" or "daughter"youwereclosetotrouble.

"Why?" I insisted.

"Becauseyoudon'thaveanyideawhatyou're doing,"hesaid.Hefrownedandrubbedhis forehead.Whenhespo keagain,theedgewentoutof his voice. "It's better to teach people than to sca re them, Lauren. If you scare them andnothing happens, they lose their fear,and you lose some of your authority with them. It's harder to scare them asecond time, harder to teach them, harder to win back their trust. Best to begin by teac hing." Hismouthcrookedintoalittlesmile."It's interesting that youchosetobeginyoureffortswiththebookyou lenttoJoanne. Didyoueverthinkofteachingfromthat book?"

"Teaching. . .my kindergartners?"

"Why not. Get them startedonthe right foot. Youcouldevenputtogetheraclassforolderkidsandadults. Something likeM r. Ibarra's woodcarvingclass,Mrs.Balter'sneedleworkclasses,andyoungRob ert Hsu's as tronomy lectures. People are bored. Theywouldn'tmindanotherinformalclassnowthatthey've lost the Yannis television. If you can think of ways to ente rtain them and teach them at the same time, you'll get your informationout. And all without makinganyone lookdown."

"Lookdown...?"

"Into the abyss, Daughter," But I wasn't in trouble any more. Not at the moment. "You've just noticed the abyss," he continued. "The adults in this community have been balancing at the edge of it for more year s thanyou've been alive."

I got up, went over to him and tookhishand. "It'sgettingworse,Dad."

"I know."

"Maybe it's time to look down. Time to look for some hand and foot holdsbefore we just get pushed in."

"That's why we have target practice every weekandLazorwireandouremergencybell. Youridea foremergency packs is a good one. Some people already have them. For earthquakes. Somewill assemblethem if I suggest it. And, of course, somewon't doanythingatall. There are always people who won't do anything."

"Will you suggest it?"

"Yes. At the next neighborhood association meeting."

"What else canwedo? None of this is fast enough."

"It will have to be." He stood up, a tall, broadwall ofaman."Whydon'tyouaskaround,seeifanyonein the neighborhoodsknowsanythingaboutmartialarts. You need more than a booko rtwo to learngooddepen dableunarmedcombat."

I blinked. "Okay."

"CheckwitholdMr.HsuandMr.andMrs.Montoya."

"Mr.an dMrs.?"

"I think so. Talk to them about classes, not about Armageddon."

I lookedupat him, and he lookedmore like a wallthanever, standing and waiting. And he had offered mealot-all I would get, I suspected. I sighed.

"Okay, Dad, I promise. I'll try not to scare anyone else. I just hope thingshold together longenough for us to do it your way."

And he echoed my sigh. "At last. Good. Now come out back with me. There are some important things buried in the yard in sealed containers. It's time for you to knowwhere they are--just in case."

SUNDAY, MARCH 9, 2025

Today, Dadpreached from Genesissix, Noahand theark: "And Godsawthat the wickedness of manwas gre at in the earth, and that every imagination ofthethoughtsandofhisheartwasonlyevilcontinually. And it repented the Lord that hehad made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man,andbeast,andthecreepingthingand thefowlsofthe air; for it repenteth me that I have mad ethem. But Noah found grace in the eyesof the Lord."

And then, of course, later Godsays to Noah, "Maketheeanarkofgopherwood; roomsshaltthoumakein the ark, and shalt pitch it within an dwithout with pitch."

Dadfocusedonthetwo-partnatureofthissituation. GoddecidestodestroyeverythingexceptNoah,hisfamily, and some animals .Butif Noah isgoing to be saved, he has plenty of hard work to do.

Joannecametomeafterchurchandsaidshewassorry for all the craziness.

"Okay," I said.

"Stillfriends?"sheasked.

And I hedged: "Not enemies, anyway. Get my father'sbookbackto me. Hewantsit."

"My mother took it. I didn't knowshe'd get so upset."

"It isn't hers. Get it back to me. Or have yourdad give it to mine. I don't care. But he wants his book."

"All right."

Iwatchedherleavethehouse. Shelooksso trustworthy--tallandstraightandserious and intelligent-- I still feel inclined to trus ther. But I can't. Idon't. Shehasnoide ahow much she could have hurt me if I had given her just a few more words to use again st me. I don't think I'll ever trust her again, and I hate that. She was my be st friend. Now she isn't.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12, 2025

Garden thieves got in last night. They strippedcitrus trees of fruit in the Hsu yard and the Talcott yard. In the process, they trampled what was left of wintergardensandmuchofthespringplanting.

Dadsayswehavetosetuparegularwatch.He triedtocallaneighborhoodassociationmeetingfor tonight,butit'sa worknightforsomepeople, includingGaryHsuwhosleepsoverathisjob wheneverhehastoreportinperson. We're supposedtogettogetherforameetingonSaturday.Meanwhile, Dad got Jay Garfield, Wyatt and Kayla Talcott, Alex Montoya, and Edwin Dunn together to patroltheneighborhoodinshiftsinarmedpairs. That meant that except for the Talcotts whoare already apair(andwhoaresoangryabouttheirgardenthatIpity any thief who gets in their way), the others havetofindpartnersamongtheotheradultsofthe neighborhood.

"Find someone you trust to protect your back," I heard Dad tell the little group. Eachpair was to patrol for two hoursfrom just before darkto just after dawn. The first patrol, walking through or looking intoallthebackyardswouldgetpeopleusedtotheideaof watchers while they were still awake enough to understand.

"Makesure they see you if you get first watch," Dad said. "The sight of you will remind them that there will be watchers all through the night. Wedon't want any of them mistaking you for thieves."

Sensible.Peoplegotobedsoonafterdarktosave electricity,butbetweendinneranddarknessthey spendtimeon theirporchesorintheiryardswhereitisn't soh ot. Some listen to their radio on front orbackporches.Nowand thenpeoplegettogethertoplay music, sing, play boardg ames, talk, or get out on the paved part of the street for volleyball, touch football, basketball,ortennis. People used to play baseball, but we just can't afford what that costs inwindows.Afewpeoplejustfindacomerandreada bookwhilethere'sstilldaylight.It'sa good,comfo rtable, recreational time. What a pity to spoil it with reminders of reality. But it can't be helped.

"What will you do if you catch a thief?" Cory asked my father beforehewent out. He was on the second shift,andheandCorywerehavingararecupof coffeetogetherinthekitchenwhilehewaited. Coffeewasforspecial occasions. Icouldn'tmissthegoo dsmell of it in my room where I lay awake.

I eavesdrop. I don't put drinkingglasses to walls or crouch with my earagainst doors, but I do often lieaw akelongafterdarkwhenwekidsareall supposedtobeasleep. Thekitchenisacrossthehall from my room, the dinin groom is nearby at the end of the hall, and my parents' roomisnext door. Thehouseisoldandwellin sulated. If there's ashut doorbetween meand the conversation, I can'thearmuch. But at night with all or most of the lights out, I can leave my door open a crack, and if other doors are also open, I can hear alot. I learnal ot.

"We'll chase him off, I hope," Dad said. "We'veagreedtothat. We'llgivehimagoodscareandlethim kno w there are easier ways to get a dollar."

"A dollar...?"

"Yes, indeed.Our thieves didn't steal all that foodbecausetheywerehungry. They stripped those trees-- too keverything they could."

"Iknow," Corysaid. "I tooksome lemonsandgrapefruitstoboththeHsusandtheWyattstoday andtoldthem theycouldpickfromourtreeswhen they neededmore. I took themsomeseed, too. They both had a lot of young plants trampled, but this early in the season, they should be able torepairthedamage."

"Yes." My father paused. "But you see my point. People steal that way for money. They're not desperate. Justgreedy and dangerous. We might beabletoscarethemintolookingforeasierpickings."

"But what if you can't?" Cory asked, almost whispering. Her voice fell so low that I was afraidIwould misssomething.

"If you can't, will you shoot them?"
"Yes," he said.

"...yes?" she repeated in that same small voice.

"Just...'yes?" ShewaslikeJoannealloveragain--denial personified. What planet do people like that live on?

"Yes," my fathersaid.

"Why!"

Therewasalongsilence. Whenmyfatherspokeagain, his own voi ce had gone very soft. "Baby, ifthesep eoplestealenough,they'llforceustospend morethanwecanaffordonfood--orgohungry. Welive on the edgea s it is." You knowhow hard thingsare."

"But. . .couldn't we just call thepolice?"

"Forwhat? We can't afford their fees, and anyway, they're not interested until after a crime has been committed. Even then, if you call them, they won'tshowupforhours--maybenotfortwoorthreedays."

"I know."

"What are you saying then? You want the kidsto gohungry? Youwantthieves coming into the house once they'vestripped the gardens?"

"But they haven't done that."

"Of course they have. Mrs. Sims was only their latest victim."

"Shelivedalone. Wealwayssaidsheshouldn'tdothat."

"You want to trust themnot to hurt you or the kidsjustbecausetherearesevenofus? Baby, we can't live by pretendin gthis is still twenty or thirty years ago."

"Butyoucouldgotojail!"Shewascrying--not sobbing,butspeakingwiththatvoice-full-of-tears thatshecanman agesometimes.

"No," Dadsaid. "If we have to shoot someone, we're together in it. After we've shot him wecarry him into the nearest house. It's still legal to shoothousebreakers. Afterthat we do a little damage and get our sto ries straight."

Long, longsilence. "You couldstill get in trouble."

"I'll risk it."

Another longsilence. "'Thou shalt not kill," Corywhispered.

"Nehemiah four," Dad said. "Verse 14."

There was nothingmore. A few minutes later, I heard Dad leave. I waited until I heardCorygoto her room and shut the door. Then I got up, shut my door, moved my lampso the light wouldn't showunderthe door, thenturned itonandopened my grandmother's Bible. Shehadhadalotof Bibles and Dadhadletmekeepthisone.

Nehemiah, chapterfour, Verse 14: "And I lookedandroseupandsaiduntothenobles, and to the rest of the people, be not afrai dof them:remembertheLordwhichisgreatandterrible,and fight for yourb rethren, yoursons, and yourdaughters, yourwivesandyourhouses."

Interesting. Interesting that Dadhad that verse ready, and that Cory recognized it. Maybe they'vehadthis conversation before.

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 2025

It'sofficial.

Nowwehavearegularneighborhoodwatch--a rosterofpeoplefromeveryhouseholdwhoareover eighteen,go odwithguns--theirownandothers'--and con sidered responsible by my father and by thepeoplewhohavealr eadybeenpatrollingthe neighborhood. Since none of the watchers haveeverbeencopsorsecurityguards,they'llgoon workingin pairs, watchingoutforeachotheraswell asfortheneighborhood. They'llusewhistlestocallfor help if they need it. Also, they'll meet once a wee kto read, discuss, and practice martial artsand shoot-out techniques. The Montoyas will give their martial artsclasses, all right, but not at my suggestion. Old Mr. Hsu ishaving back problems, and hewon't beteaching anything for awhile, but the Montoya sseem to be enough. I plan to sit in on the classes as often as I can stand to share everyone's practice pains.

Dadhascollectedallhisbooksfrommethismorning. All I have left are my notes. I don't mind. Thankstothega rdenthieves, peopleare preparing themselve sfor the worst. I feel almost grateful to the thieves.

They haven't come back, by the way-- our thieves. Whenthey do, we should beable to give them something they don't expect.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, 2025

Our thieves paid us another visit last night. Maybe they weren't the same ones, but their intentionswere the same: To take away what someoneelsehassweatedtogrowandverymuch needs.

Thistime they were after Richard Moss'srabbits. Thoserabbitsaretheneighborhood'sonlylivestock except forsomechickenstheCruzandMontoyafamilies tried to raise a few years ago. Those were stolenassoonas theywereoldenoughtomakenoise and let outsiders know they were there. The Moss rabbits havebeeno ur secret until this yearwhenRichardMossinsistedonsellingmeatand whateverhiswivescouldmakefromraworta nnedrabbit hid es outbeyond the wall. The Mosseshad beenselling tousall along, of course, meat, hides, fertilizer, everything except live rabbits. Those hehoardedasbreedingstock.Butnow,stubborn,arrogant, andg reedy, he had decided he couldearnmoreifhepeddledhismerchandiseoutside. So, nowthewordisouton thestreetaboutthedamnedrabbit s, and last night someone cameto get them. The Mossrabbithouse is a converted three-car garageaddedtothepropertyinthe 1980s according to Dad. It's hard to believe any household onceh ad three cars, and gas fueledcars at that. But Iremembertheoldgaragebefore Richard Moss converted it. It was hugewith three blackoils potson the floor where three carshadonce been housed. Richard Moss repaired the walls and roof, put in windows for cross ventilation, and in general, made the place almost fit for people to live in. In fact, it's muchbetter than what a lot of people live in now ontheoutside. Hebuiltrows and tiers of cages -- hutches--and put in more electric lights and ceiling fans. The fans can be made towork onkidpower. He's hooked them up to an old bicycle frame, and every Mosskid who's olden ought omanage the pedals so one ror later gets drafted into powering the fans. The Mosskidshate it, but they know what they'll get if they don't do it.

Idon'tknowhowmanyrabbitstheMosseshave now,butitseemsthey'realwayskillingandskinningand doin gdis gusting thingsto pelts. Even a little monopoly is worth a lot of trouble.

Thetwothieveshadmanagedtostuff13rabbitsintocanva ssacks by the time our watchersspotted them. Thewatcherswere Alejandro Montoyaand Julia Lincoln, one of Shani Yannis's sisters. Mrs. Montoyahas two kidssick with flusoshe's off the watchroster for a while.

Mrs.LincolnandMr.Montoyafollowedtheplanthat thegroupofwatchershadputtogetherattheirmeeting s. Without a word of command orwarning,theyfiredtheirgunsintotheairtwoorthreetimeseach, at the same time, blowing their whistles fullblast. Theykepttocover, but inside the Mosshouse, someonewokeupand turne dontherabbithouse lights. That could have been alethalmistake for the watchers, but they were hidden behind p bushes.

omeg ranate

Thetwothieves ranlikerabbits.

Abandoningsacks,rabbits,prybars,alongcoilof rope,wirecutters,andevenanexcellentlongaluminum ladder, they scrambled up that laddera ndoverthewallinseconds. Ourwallisthreemeters highandtoppedoffwithpiece sofbrokenglassas wellastheusualbarbedwireandtheallbutinvisible Lazorwire. Allthewirehadbeencutinspiteof oureffort s. What a pity we couldn't afford to electrify it or set other traps. But at least the glass-- theolde st, simplest of our tricks--had gotten one of them. Wefoundabroadstreamofdriedblooddowntheinsideof the wall this morning.

WealsofoundaGlock19pistolwhereoneofthe thieveshaddroppedit.Mrs.LincolnandMr. Montoyacould havebeenshot.Ifthethieveshadn't beenscaredoutoftheirminds,therecouldhavebeen a gun battle. Someonein the Moss house or a neighboring housecould have been hurt or killed. Cory went after Dad about that once they were alone in the kitchentonight.

"Iknow,"Dadsaid.Hesoundedtiredandmiserable.

"Don't think we haven't thought about those things. That's why we want to scare the thievesaway. Evensh ooting into the air isn'tsafe. Nothing's safe."

"They ranaway this time, but they won't always run."

"I know."

"So what, then? You protect rabbitsor oranges, and maybe get a child killed?"

Silence.

"We can't livethis way!"Cory shouted. I jumped. I'veneverheardhersoundlikethatbefore.

"Wedolivethisway,"Dadsaid. There was no anger in his voice, no emotional response at all to her shouting. There was nothing. We ariness. Sadness. I've never heard him sound so tired, so. . . almost beaten. And yethehad won. His idea had beaten off a pair of armed thie ves without our having to hurtanyone. If the thie ves had hurt themselves, that was their problem.

Of course they wouldcomeback, or otherswouldcome. That would happennomatter what. And Corywas right. The next thieves might not lose their guns and runaway. Sowhat? Should we lie in our beds and let them take all we had and hope they were content with stripping our gardens? How long does a thief stay content? And what sit like to starve?

"Wecouldn'tmakeitwithoutyou,"Corywassaying. Shewasn'tshoutingnow."Thatcouldhavebeenyou out there, facin gcriminals. Next time it might beyou. Youcouldbeshot, protecting the neighbors' rabbit s."

"Did you notice," Dad said, "that every off-duty watcheransweredthewhistleslastnight? They cameo ut to defend their community."

"I don't care about them! It's you I'm worriedabout!"

"No," he said. "We can't think that way any more. Cory, there'snobody to help us but God andourselve s.IprotectMoss'splaceinspiteofwhatI thinkofhim,andheprotectsmine,nomatterwhathe thinks of me. We all loo kout for one another." He paused. "I've got plenty of insurance. You and thekidsshouldbeabletomake itallrightif--"

"No!" Cory said. "Do you think that's all it is? Money?Doyouthink--?"

"No, Babe. No." Pause. "I knowwhat it is to be leftalone. This is no world to be alone in."

Therewasalongsilence, and Ididn't think they would say any more. I lay on my bed, wondering if I should get up and shut my door so I could turn on my lamp and write. But there was a little more.

"Whatarewesupposedtodoifyoudie?"she demanded,andIthinkshewascrying."Whatdowedo if they shoot you over some damn rabbits?"

"Live!" Dad said. "That'sall anybody candoright now. Live. Holdout. Survive. I don't know whethergood timesarecomingbackagain.ButIknowthatwon't matter if wedon't survive these times."

Thatwastheendoftheirtalk. Ilayinthedark for a longtime, thinking about what they had said. Cory was right again. Dadmight gethurt. He might get killed. I don't knowhow to think about that. I can write about it, but I don't feel it. On some deep level, I don't believe it. I guess I'm asgood at denial asanyone.

So Cory is right, but it doesn't matter. AndDad isright,buthedoesn'tgofarenough.GodisChange,and in the end, God prevails. But God exist sto be shaped. It isn't enough forusto just survive, limpingalong,playingb usinessasusualwhilethingsgetworseand worse. If that's the shape we give to God, thensomedaywemustbe cometooweak--toopoor,too hungry, too sick-- tod efendourselves. Then we'llbewipedout.

There has to be more that we can do, a better destiny that we can shape. Another place. Another way. Something!

7

We are all Godseed, but no more or less so than any other aspect of the universe, Godseed is all that changes. Earthseed is all that spreads Earthlife to new earths. The universe is Godseed. Only we are Earthseed. And the Destiny of Earthseed is to takeroot amongthestars.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 2025

Sometimesnamingathing--givingitanameor discoveringitsname--helpsonetobegintounderstand it. Knowing then ame of a thingand knowingwhatthatthingisforgivesmeevenmoreof ahandleonit.

TheparticularGod-is-Changebeliefsystemthatseems right to me will be called Earthseed. I've tried to name it before. Failing that, I've tried to leave it unnamed. Neith er effort has mademe comfortable. Name pluspurposeequalsfocusforme.

Well, today, I found the name, found it while I wasweedingthebackgardenandthinkingabouttheway plants seedthemselves, windborne, animalborne, waterbo rne, far from their parent plants. They have no ability at all to travel great distances under their ownpower, and yet, they do travel. Even they don't have to just sit in one placeand wait to be wiped out. There are islands thousands of miles from anywhere -- the Hawaiian Islands, for example, and Easter Island--where plants seeded themselves and grewlong before any human sarrived.

Earthseed.

I am Earthseed. Anyone canbe. Someday, I think there will be a lot of us. And I think we'll have to seed ourselvesfarther and farther from this dying place.

I've never felt that I wasmaking any of thisup-- not thename, Earthseed, notanyofit. Imean, I've never felt that it was anything other than real: discovery rather thaninvention, exploration rather than creation. I wish I couldbelieve it was all supernatural, and that I'mgettingmessages from God. But then, I don't believe in that kind of God. All I do is observe and taken otes, trying to put things down in ways thatareaspowerful, assimple, and as direct as I feel them. I can neverdothat. I keep trying, but I can't. I'm not good enough as writer or poet or whatever it is I need to be. I don't knowwhat to do about that. It drives me franticsometimes. I'm getting better, but soslowly.

The thing is, even with my writing problems, every time I understand a little more, I wonder why it's taken mesolong--whytherewaseveratime when I didn't understandathing so obvious and real and true.

Here's the only puzzle in it all, the only paradox, orbitofillogicorcircular reasoning or whatever it should be called:

Why is the universe? To shapeGod.

Why is God?

To shape the universe.

I can't get rid of it. I've tried to change it or dump it, but Ican't.I cannot. It feels like the truest thing I've ever written. It's as mysteriousandasobviousas any other explanation of Godorthe universe that I've ever read, except that to me the others feel inadequate, at best.

AlltherestofEarthseedisexplanation--whatGodis, what God does, what we are, what w eshould do, what we can't help doing. . . . Consider: Whetheryou'reahumanbeing,aninsect,amicrobe,orastone, this verseis true.

All that you touch, YouChange.

All that you Change

Changesyou.

The only lasting truth

Is Change. God

Is Change.

I'mgoingtogothroughmyoldjournalsandgatherthe ver ses I've written into one volume. I'll put them into one of the exercise notebooks that Cory handsouttotheolderkidsnowthattherearesofewcomputers in the neig hborhood. I've written ple nty ofuselessstuffinthosebooks, gettingmyhighschoolwork out of the way. Now I'll put one to betteru se.

Then, someday when people are able to paymore attention to what I say than to how old I am, I'll use these verse sto pry them loose from the rotting past, and may be push them into saving themselves and building a future that makes sense.

That's if everythingwill just hold together for a fewmoreyears.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 2025

I've finally assembled a small survival pack formyself--agrab-and-runpack. I'vehadtodigsome thingsIneed outofthegarageandtheatticsothat noonecomplainsaboutmytakingthingstheyneed. I'vecollectedahatchet, for instance, and two small, light, all-metal pots. There 's plenty of stuff like that around because noonethrows anything away that has any possibility of someday being useful or salable.

Ipackedmyfewhundreddollarsinsavings--almosta thousand. I tmigh tfeedmefortwoweeksifl'mallowed to kee pit, and if I'm very careful what I buy and where I buy it. I've kept up with prices, questioning Dadwhe nheandtheotherneighborhoodmen do the essential shopping. Food pricesareinsane, always going up, neverd own. Everyone complains about them.

Ifoundanoldcanteenandaplasticbottlebothforwater, and I resolved to keep them clean and full. I packedmatches, afullchange of clothing, including shoes in case I have to get up at night and run, comb, so ap, too the brushand too the paste, tampons, to ilet paper, bandages, pin s, needles and thread, alcohol, aspirin, acouple of spoons and forks, a can opener, my pocket knife, packets of a corn flour, dried fruit, roasted nutsanded ible see ds, driedmilk, a little sugarand salt, my survival notes, several plastic storage bags, large and small, alot of plantable rawseed, myjournal, my Earthseed notebook, and lengthsof clothesline. I stowed all thisinapairofoldpillowcases, one inside the other for strength. I rolled the pillowcases into a blanket pack and tied it with some of the clotheslines that I could grabit and runwithout losing things, but I made it easy to open at the top so that I could get my journal in and out, change the ewater to keep it fresh, and less often, change the food and check on the seed. The last thing I w anted to find out was that instead of carrying pla ntable seed or edible food, I had a load of bugs and worms.

IwishIcouldtakeagun.Idon'townoneandDadwon't let me keep one of his in my room. I mean to try to grab one if trouble comes, but I may not be able to. It would be crazy to wind up outsidewithnothingbuta knifeandascaredlook,butitcouldhappen. Dadand Wyatt Talcott tooku sout for target practice today, and afterward I tried to talkDad into letting me keepone of the guns in my room.

"No," he said, sitting down, tired and dusty, behindhisdeskinhiscluttered office. "Youdon't have anywhe re to keep it safeduring the day, and the boys are always in and out of your room."

I hesitated, then told him about the emergency pack that I had put together.

Henodded."Ithoughtitwasagoodideabackwhenyou first sug gested it," he said. "But, think, Lauren. Itwoul dbelikeagifttoaburglar.Money,food,water,a gun. . . . Most burglars don't find what they want all bundled upandwaitingforthem.Ithinkwe'dbetter makeitalittleharderforanyburglarwhocomeshere to get hold of a gun."

"It will just be a rolled up blanket mixed in with some other rolled or folded bed clothes in my closet," I said. "No one will even notice it."

"No,"heshookhishead."No,thegunsstaywherethey are."

And that's that. I think he'smoreworried about theboyssnoopingaroundthanaboutburglars. My brothers have been taughthow to behave around guns all their lives, but Greg iso nly eight and Benis nine. Dad just isn't ready to put temptation in their paths yet. Marcusat 11 is more trustworthy than a lot of adults, but Keith at almost 13 is a question mark. He wouldn't steal from Dad. He wouldn't dare. But he has stolen from me--only little things so far.

He wants a gun, though, the way thirsty people want water. He wants to be all grown up--yesterday. So maybeDad'sright.Ihatehisdecision,butmaybe he'sright.

"Wherewouldyougo?"Iaskedhim,changingthesubject. "If we were forced out of here, whe re wouldyou takeus?"

Heblewoutabreath, puffinguphischeeks for a second. "Totheneighborsortothecollege," he said. "The college ha stemporary emergency accommodations for employees who are burned ordriven out of their homes."

"Andthen?"

"Rebuilding, fortifying, doing whateverwecan do toliveandbesafe."

"Would you everthinkabout leavinghere, headingnorthtowherewaterisn'tsuchaproblemandfood ischeape r?"

"No." He stared intospace. "My job down here isassecureasajobcanbe. Therearenojobsupthere. Ne wcomers work for food if they work at all. Experien ce doesn't matter. Education doesn't matter. There are just too many desperate people. Theywork their lives away for a sack of beans and they live on the streets."

"Ihearditwaseasierupthere, "Isaid." Oregon, Washington, Canada."

"Closed," he said. "You've got to sneak intoOregon if you get in at all. Even harder to sneak into Washington. People getshot every day trying tosneakinto Canada. Nobodywants California trash."

"But people do leave. People are alwaysmoving north."

"They try. They're desperate and they have nothing to lose. But I do. This is my home. Beyond taxes, I don't owe a penny on it. You and your brothers haveneverknownahungrydayhere,andGodwilling,you never will."

In my Earthseednotebook, I've written,

A tree

Cannot grow

In its parents' shadows.

Is it necessary to write thingslike that? Everyone knows them. What do they meannow, anyway? Whatdo esthisonemeanifyouliveinacul-de-sac withawallaroundin? Whatdoesitmeanifyou'redamned lucky to live in a cul-de-sac with a wallaroundit?

SATURDAY, JULY 19, 2025

Tomorrow, I'll be sixteen. Only sixteen. I feel older. I want to be older. I need to be older. I hate being a kid. Timedrags!

TracyDunnhasdisappeared. She'sbeendepressedsin ce Amy was killed. Whenshe talked at all, it was aboutdyingandwantingtodieanddeservingtodie.

Everyonekepthopingshewouldgetoverhergrief-- orherguilt--andgetonwithherlife.Maybeshe couldn't.Dad talkedwithherseveraltimes,andI knowhewasworriedabouther.Hercrazyfamilyhasn't been anyh elp. They treat her the way she treated Amy: They ignore her.

Therumoristhatshewentoutsidesometimeyesterd ay. A group of Moss and Payne kidssay theysawhergo outofthegatejustaftertheyleftschool. Noonehasseenhersince.

SUNDAY, JULY 20, 2025

Here's the birthday gift that came into my mind this morning as I wokeup--just two lines:

The Destiny of Earthseed

Is to take root among the stars.

ThisiswhatIwasreachingforafewdaysagowhen thestoryofthenewplanetsbeingdiscoveredcaughtmy attention. It's true, of course. It's obviou s.

Right now, it's also impossible. The worldisinhorribleshape. Evenrich countries aren't doing as well as history says rich countries used to do. President Donnerisn't the only one breaking upand selling off science and space projects. Noone is expanding the kind of exploration that doesn't earn an immediate profit, or at least promise big future profits. There's no mood now for doing anything that could be considered unnecessary or wasteful. And yet,

The Destiny of Earthseed

Isto take root among the stars.

Idon'tknowhowitwillhappenorwhenitwill happen. There's somuchtodobeforeitcanevenbegin. I guess that's to be expected. There's always a lot to do before you get to go to heaven.

8

To get along with God,

Consider the consequences of your behavior. EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING SATURDAY, JULY 26, 2025

TracyDunnhasnotcomehomeandhasnotbeenfound by the police. I don't think she will be. She's onlybeen goneforaweek, butaweek outsidemust belikeaweek inhell. Peoplevanishoutside. They gothroughourgatelike Mr. Yannisdid, and everyonewaitsforthem, buttheynever comeback--or they comeback in anurn. I think Tracy Dunnisdead.

BiancaMontoya ispregnant. It isn't just gossip, it's true, and it matters to me, somehow. Bianca is17,unm arried,andoutofhermindaboutJorgeIturbe wholivesattheIbarrahouseandisYolandaIbarra's brother.

Jorge admits to being the father. I don't knowwhy they didn't just get marriedbefore everything got so public. Jorge is 23, and he, at least, ought to have somesense. Anyway, they'regoing to get marriednow. The Ibarra and Iturbefamilies have been feuding with the Montoyas for a week over this. So stupid. You'd think they had nothing else to do. At least they're both Latino. No interracial feud this time. Last year when Craig Dunnwho's white and one of the saner members of the Dunnfamily was caught making love to Siti Moss who's black and Richard Moss' soldest daughter to boot, I thought some one was going to get killed. Crazy.

But my point isn't who's sleepingwith whom orwho's feuding. Mypointis--myquestionis--howinthe worldc ananyonegetmarried and make babies with things the way they are now.

I mean, I know peoplehave alwaysgotten marriedandhadkids,butnow....Nowthere'snowheretogo, nothing to do. A cou ple getsmarried, and if they're lucky, they get a roomora garage to live in-- with no hope of anything betterand every reason to expect thingsto get worse.

Bianca's chosen life is one of myoptions. It's not one that I intend to exercise, but it is pretty much what theneighborhoodexpectsofme--ofanyonemy age. Growup a little more, get married, have babies. CurtisTalcott says the new Iturbe family will get half-a-garage to live in after they marry. Jorge's sisterCeliaIturbeCruzandherhusbandandbabyhave the otherh alf. Two couples, andnot onepayingjobam ongthem. Thebesttheycouldhope forwouldbetomoveintosomerichpeople's compoundasdomesticservants andworkforroomand board. The re's noway to save any money or ever do any better.

And what if they wanted to gonorth, try for a better life in Oregon or Washingtonor Canada? It wouldbe muchharder to travel with ababy or two, and muchmoredangeroustotrytosneakpasthostileguards andover statelinesorinternationalboarders with babies.

I don't knowwhether Biancaisbrave or stupid. Sheandhersisterarebusyalteringtheirmother'sold weddingdr ess,andeveryone'scookingandgetting readyforapartyasthoughthesewerethegoodolddays. How can they?

I like CurtisTalcott a lot. Maybe I love him. SometimesI thinkI do. He sayshe lovesme. But if all I had to look forward to was marriageto him andbabiesandpovertythatjustkeepsgettingworse,Ithink I'd kill myself.

Back at home, my brother Keith slipped out of theneighborhood--outthroughthefrontgates and away. He stoleCory's keyandtook of fonhisown. Dadand I didn't known ntil we got home. Keith was still gone, and by then Cory knew he must be outside. She had checked with others in theneighborhoodandtwooftheDunnkids,twinsAllison and Marie, age six, said they saw him go out thegate. ThatwaswhenCorywenthomeanddiscovered that he rkey was g one.

Dad, tiredandangryandscared, was going to goright backo ut to look for him, but Keith got home just as Dad was leaving. Cory, Marcus, and I had gone to the front porch with Dad, all three ofusspeculatingaboutwhereKeithhadgone,andMarcu sand I volunte ering to go out with Dad to helpsearch. Itwasalmostdark.

"You get back in that house and stay there," Dad said. "It's badenough to have one of you out there."He checkedthesubmachinegun,madesureitwasfully loaded.

"Dad, look," I said. I had spotted something movingthreehousesdown--quick, shadowymovement along sidetheGarfieldporch.Ididn'tknowitwasKeith. I was attracted by its furtiveness. Someo newassneakinga round, tryingtohide.

Dadwasquickenoughtoseethemovementbeforeit was hidden by the Garfield house. He got up at once, took the gun, and went to check. The erest of uswatched and waited.

MomentslaterCorysaidsheheardanoddnoisein thehouse.IwastoofocusedonDadandwhatwas goingonoutsi detohearwhatsheheard,ortopay any attention to her. She went in. Marcusand I were still on the porchwhen she screamed.

Marcusand I glanced at each other, then at the frontdoor.Marcuslungedforthedoor.IyelledforDad.Da dw as out of sight, but I heard himanswermy call.

"Comequick," I shouted, then I ran into thehouse. Cory, Marcus, Bennett, and Gregory were in thekitch en, clustered around Keith. Keithwassprawled, panting, on the floor, wearing only his underpants. Hewasscrape dand bruised, bleeding, and filthy. Cory knelt beside him, examining him, questioning him, crying.

"Whathappenedtoyou? Whodidthis? Whydidyou gooutside? Whereareyour clothes? What--?"

"Where's the key you stole?" Dad cut in. "Did they take it from you?"

Everyone jumped, looked up at Dad, then down at Keith.

"I couldn't help it," Keith said, still panting. "I couldn't, Daddy. There were five guys."

"So they got the key."

Keith nodded, careful not to meet Dad's eyes.

Dad turned and strodeout of the house, almost at arun.ItwastoolatenowtogetGeorgeorBrianHsu tochan gethegatelock.Thatwouldhavetobedone tomorrow,andnewkeysmadeandpassedout.Ithought Dad mustb e goingout to warn people and to put more watchers on duty. I wanted to offer to help alert people, but I didn't. Dad looked too angry to accept help fromone of hiskidsright then. Andwhenhegotback, Keithwasinforit. Washeeverin forit. Apair ofpantsgone, and ashirt and a pair of shoes. Cory had neverbeen willing to let us run around barefoot the way a lot of kids did, except in the house. Her definitions of being civilized did not involve dirty, heavily callused feet any more than they involved dirty, diseased skin. Shoes were expensive, and wewere always growing out of ours, but Cory insisted. Each of ushad at least one pair of wearable shoes, inspite of what they cost, and they cost a lot. Now money would have to be found to get an extrapair for Keith.

Keithcurleduponthefloor,smudgingthetilewith bloodfromhisnoseandmouth,hugginghimselfandcryingn ow that Dad was gone. It took Cory two or three minutes to get him upand half carry him to the bathroom. I tried to help her, but she stared at me like I was the one who beat him up, so I let them alone. It wasn't as though I wantedto help. I just thought I should. Keith was in realpain, and it was hard for me to endure sharing it.

Icleanedupthebloodsonoonewouldslipinitortrack it around. Then I fixed dinner, ate, fed the three younger boys,andputtherestasideforDad,Cory, andKeith.

SUNDAY, AUGUST3, 2025

Keithhadtoconfesswhathehaddonethismorningat church. He had to stand up in fro nt of the whole congregationand tell them everything, including what the five thugs had done to him. Then hehad toapologize--to God,tohisparents,andtothe congregationthathehadendangeredand inconvenienced. Dadmadehimdothatove rCory's objections.

Dadnever hit him, though last night he must have been tempted. "Why would you do such a thing!" he keptdemanding. "Howcouldanysonofminebesostupid! Wher eare yourbrains, boy? What did youthinkyou weredoing? I'mtalkingtoyou! Answerme!"

Keithansweredandanswered, but the answersneverseemed to make much sense to Dad. "I ain't no baby no more," he wept. Or, "I wante dto showyou. Just wanted to show you! You always let Lauren dostuff!" Or, "I'm a man! I shouldn't be hiding in the house, hiding in the wall; I'm a man!"

ItwentonandonbecauseKeithrefusedtoadmithe haddoneanythingwrong.Hewantedtoshowhewas a man, not a sca red girl. It wasn't his fault that a gang of guys jumpedhim, beat him, robbed him. He didn't do anything. It wasn't his fault.

Dadstaredat him in utter disgust. "You disobeyed,"hesaid. "Youstole. Youendangeredthelives and the property of everyoneh ere, including your mother, your sister, and your little brothers. If youwere themany outhin kyouare, I'dbeatthehellout of you!"

Keith staredstraight ahead. "Bad guys come in even if they don't have a key," he muttered. "They come in and steal stuff. It's not my fault!"

It took Dad twohours to get Keith to admit that itwashisfault,noexcuses.He'ddonewrong.He wouldn'tdo itagain.

My brotherisn't very smart, but he makesupfor it inpurestubbornness.Myfatherissmartandstubborn. Keith didn'thaveachance,buthemadeDadwork forhisvictory.Thenextmorning,Dadhadhisrevenge. I don't believe he thought of Keith's forced confession that way, but Keith's exp ressiontold me that he did.

"How do I get out of thisfamily," Marcusmuttered to me as we watched. I sympathized. He had toshare a roomwith Keith, and the two of them, only a year apart in age, fought all the time. Now thingswouldbe worse.

KeithisCory'sfavorite.Ifyouaskedher,shewouldsay she didn't have a favorite, but she does. She babie s him and lets him getaway with skipping chores, a little lying, a little stealing. . . . Maybe that's why Keiththinks when he screw sup, it's okay.

Thismoming'ssermonwasontheten commandmentswithextraemphasison"Honorthyfather and thy mothe r," and "Thou shalt not steal." I think Dad got rid of a lot of anger and frustration,preachingthatsermon. Keith, tall,stone-faced, lookingolderthanhisthirteenyears,kepthisanger. I could see him keeping it inside, holding it down, chokingonit.

Dadwent out looking for Keith today. He even called in the police. He sayshe doesn't knowhow we'll afford the fee, but he's scared. The longer Keithis gone, the more likely heisto get hurt orkilled. Marcussa yshe thinks Keith went looking for the guys who beat himup. I don't believe it. Not evenKeithwouldgol ookingforfiveguys--orevenoneguy--with nothingbut a BB gun.

Cory'sevenmoreupsetthanDad.She'sscaredand jumpyandsicktoherstomach,andshekeepscrying. I talkedh er into going back to bed, then taught herclasses myself. I've done that four or fivetimesbeforewhenshe wassick,soitwasn'ttoo weirdforthekids.IjustusedCory'slessonplans,and during the first part of the day, I partnere dthe olderkidswith my kindergartners and let everyonegetatasteofteachingorlearningfromsomeonedifferent. Some of my studentsa re my ageandolder,andacoupleofthese--AuraMossandMi chael Talcott--got up and left. Theyknew I understood the work. I got the last of my high schoolworkandtestsoutoftheway almosttwoyearsago. Since then I've done uncredited (free)college work with Dad. Michael and Aura kn ow all that, but they're much toogrown up to learn anything from the likes of me. The hell with them. It's a pity, though, that myCurtishastohaveabrotherlikeMichael--notthatany of us gets to choose our brothers. TUESDAY, AUGUST 19, 2025

NosignofKeith.IthinkCoryhasgoneintomourning forhim.Ihandledclassesagaintoday,andDad went out searching again. He came home lookingexhaustedtonight, and Coryweptandshouted athim.

"You didn't try!" she saidwith me and all three of my brothers looking on. We'd all come to see whether DadhadbroughtKeithback."Youcouldhavefoundhim if you'd tried!"

Dadtriedtogotoher,butshebackedaway,stillsho uting: "If it were your preciousLauren out therealone,youw ouldhavefoundherbynow! Youdon't care about Keith."

She'snever said anything like that before.

Imean, wewerealways Coryand Lauren. Shenevera sked me to callher "mother," and I never thought to do it. I always knewshe was my stepmother. But still. . . I always loved her. It mystified me that Keith washe r favorite, but it didn't makemelove herany less. I was her kid, but not her kid. Not quite. Not really. But I always thought she loved me.

Dadshooedusall off to bed. He quieted Cory andtookherbacktotheirroom. Afewminutes ago, he came to see me.

"She didn't mean it," he said. "She loves you asthoughyouwereherdaughter, Lauren."

I just lookedat him.

"Shewantsyoutoknowshe'ssorry."

Inodded, and after a few more assurances, he went. Is she sorry? Idon't thinkso.

Did she mean it. She did. Oh, yes, she meant it.

THURSDAY, AUGUST30, 2025

Keith came back last night.

Hejustwalkedintothehouseduringdinner, as thoughhe'dbeenoutsideplayingfootballinsteadofgon esince Saturday. And this time he looked fine. Notamarkonhim. Hewaswearingacleannewset of clothing-- evenn ewshoes. All of it was of much better quality than he had when he left, and much more expensive than we could have afforded.

He still had the BB gununtil Dad tookit away from him and smashed it.

Keithwouldn'tsaywherehe'dbeenorhowhe'dgotten the new things, so Dad beat him bloody. I've only seen Dad like that once before-- whe nIwas12.Corytriedtostophim,triedtopullhimoff Keith, screamedat him in English, then in Spanish, then without words.

Gregory threw uponthe floor, and Bennett started to cry. Marcusbackedaway from the whole scene, and slippedoutofthehouse.

Thenitwasover.

Keithwascryinglikeatwo-year-oldandCorywas holdinghim.Dadstoodoverbothofthem,looking dazed.

IfollowedMarcusoutthebackdoorandstumbledand almost fell down the back ste ps. I didn't knowwhatIw asdoing.Marcuswasn'taround.Isatonthe stepsinthewarmdarknessandletmybodyshakeand hurt and vomit in helples sempathy with Keith.ThenIguessIpassedout.

Icame to sometime later with Marcusshaking me and whisperingmy name.

I got up with Marcushanging on to my arm, trying to steady me, and I got to my bedroom.

"Let me sleep inhere," he whisperedonce I was sitting on my bed, dazedand still in pain. "I'll sleep on the floor, I don't care."

"All right," I said, not caring where heslept. I laydownonthebedwithouttakingoffevenmyshoes, and drew my body into a fetal ball on top of the bedclothes. I either fell aslee pthat way or I passed out again.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2025

Keith came home tonightwhile Dad was visiting over at the Talcott house. I suspect that Keith hungarou ndandwatchedthehouseandwaiteduntilDadleft. He had com eto seeCory. He brought her a lot of money doneupin a fat roll.

She stared at it, then took it, dazed. "So much, Keith," she whispered. "Where did you get it?"

"It's for you," he said. "All for you, not him."

Hetookherhandandcloseditaroundthemoney-- andshelethimdoit,thoughshehadtoknowitmust bestolen moneyordrugmoneyorworse.

Keith gave Bennett and Gregory big, expensive barsofmilkchocolatewith peanuts. Hejustsmiledat Marcu s and me--anobvious "fuck you" smile. Then, before Dadcould come home and find him here, heleft again. Cory hadn't realize dthat he was leaving again, and sheall but screamed and clungtohim.

"No! You'll be killed out there! What's the matter with you? Stay home!"

"Mama, I won't let him beat me again," he said. "I don't need him hitting me and telling me what to do. Pretty soon, I'll be able to make more money in a daythanhecaninaweek--maybeinamonth.

"You'll be killed!"

"No I won't. I knowwhat I'm doing." He kissed her,then,withsurprisingease,tookherarmsfrom around him."I'llcomebackandseeyou,"hesaid.

"I'llbringyoupresents.

Andhevanishedoutthebackdoor, and was gone.

2026

Civilization is to groups what intelligence is to individuals. It is a means of combining the intelligence of manyto achieve ongoing group adaptation. Civilization, like intelligence may serve well, serve adequately, or fail to serve its adaptive function. When civilization fails to serve, it must disintegrate unless it is acted uponbyunifyinginternalor external forces.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

by LaurenOya Olamina

10

Whenapparentstabilitydisintegrates, A sit must N

GodisChangeÑPeople tend to give in Tofearanddepression, Toneedandgreed.

Whennoinfluenceisstrongenough

To unify people They divide. Theystruggle, Oneagainstone, Groupagainstgroup,

For survival, position, power.

Theyrememberoldhatesandgeneratenewones, Theycreatechaosandnurtureit.

They kill and kill andkill,

Untiltheyareexhaustedanddestroyed, Untiltheyareconqueredbyoutsideforces,Or until one of them becomes

A leader

Mostwillfollow, Oratyrant

Most fear.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 2026

Keith came home yesterday, bigger than ever, as tall and leanasDad is tall and broad. He'snot quite14, buthealreadylookslikethemanhewantssomuchto be. We're like that, we Olamina s--tall, sturdy, fast grow ingpeople. Except for Gregory who isonly nine, we all tower overCory. I'm still the tallest, but my height seems to annoy her these days. She lovesKeith'ssize,though--herbigson. Shejusthatesthefact that he doe sn't live with usa nymore.

"I got a room," he said to me yesterday. We talked,heandI.CorywaswithDoroteaCruzwhoisoneof herbe stfriendsandwhohasjusthadanotherbaby. Theotherboyswereplayinginthestreetandonthe island.Dadhadgon etothecollege,andwouldbegone ove rnight. Now, more than ever, it's safest to go out just at dawn, and not to try cominghomeuntil just at dawn the next morning. That's if you have togooutsideatall,whichDaddo esaboutonceaweek. The worst parasites still prowl at night and sleep late into the morning. Yet Keith lives outside.

"I got a room in a building with some otherpeople,"hesaid. Translation: Heandhisfriendswere squattinginan abandonedbuilding. Whowerehisfriends? A gang? A flock of prostitutes? A bunch of astronauts, flying high ondrugs? A den of thieves?

All of the above? Wheneverhecameto seeushe brought money to Cory and little gifts to Bennett and Gregory.

Howcouldhegetmoney? There's no honestway.

"Doyourfriendsknowhowoldyouare?" Iasked. He grinned. "Hell, no. Why should I tell them that?" I nodded. "Itdoeshelptolookoldersometimes.

"You want something to eat?"

"Yougoingtocookforme?"

"I'vecookedforyouhundredsoftimes. Thousands." "I know. But you alwayshad to before." "Don't bestupid. You think I couldn't act the way you did: Skip out on my responsibilities if I felt like it? I don't feel like it. You want to eat ornot?" "Sure." Imaderabbitstewandacornbread--enoughfor Coryandalltheboyswhentheycamein. Hehung aroundandwat chedmeworkforawhile, then began to talk to me. He's neverdone that befo re. We've never, never liked ea ch other, he and I. But hehadinformationIwanted,andheseemedtowantto talk. I must have been the safest person h ecould talk to. He wasn't afraid of shocking me. He didn'tmuchcarewhatIthought. Andhewasn'tafraidI'dtell Dad o r Cory anything he said. Of course, I wouldn't. Why cause them pain? I've never been much for tattling on people, anyway. "It's just an astyold building on the outside, "he was saying of his newhome." You wouldn't believe how great it looks once yougoin, though." "Whorehouseorspaceship?" Iasked. "It's got stuff like you never saw," he evaded. "TVwindowsyougothroughinsteadofjustsittingandlooking at. Headset s, belts, and touchrings...you seeand feel everything, doanything. Anything! There's placesa nd thingsyou can get into with that equipment that are in-sane! You don't ever have to go into the street except to get food." "And whoeverownsthis stuff took you in?" I asked. "Yeah." "Why?" He looked at me for a long time, then started to laugh. "Because I can read and write," he said at last. "And none of them can. They're all older than me, but not one of them canreador write anything. They stole all this great stuff and they couldn't even use it. Before I got there they even broke some of it because theycouldn'treadtheinstructions." Coryand I had had a hello fastruggle, teaching him to read and write. He had been bored, impatient, anything but eag "Soyoureadforaliving--helpyournewfriends learntousetheirstolenequipment," Isaid. "Yeah." "Andwhatelse?" "Nothin'else."

Whatapiss-poorliarheis. Alwayswas. He'sgotno conscience. He just isn't smart enough to tell convincing lies. "Drugs, Keith?" I asked.

"Prostitution?Robbery?"

"Isaidnothingelse! Youalwaysthinkyouknoweverything."

Isighed."You'renotdonecausingDadandCorypain, are you ?Not by a long shot."

Helookedasthoughhewantedtoshoutbackatmeor hit me. He might havedone one or the oth er if Ihadn'tm entionedCory.

"I don't give a shit about him," he said, his voice lowandugly.Hehadaman'svoicealready.Hehadeverything but a man 'sbrain. "I do more for her than he does. I bring her money and nice things. And my friends. . . myfriends knowshe lives here, and they let this place alone. He'snothing!"

Iturnedandlookedathimandsawmyfather'sface, lighter-skinned, younger, thinner, but my father's face, unm i stakable. "He's you," I whispered. "Every time I look at you, I see him. Every time you look at him, you see yourself.

"Dogshit!"

Ishrugged.

It was a long time before hespokeagain. At last he said, "Didheever hit you?"

"Not for about five years."

"Why'dhehityou--backthen?"

I thought about that, and decided to tell him. He was oldenough."HecaughtmeandRubinQuintanillain thebushestogether."

Keithshoutedwithabruptlaughter. "YouandRubin? Really? You were doin git with him? You'rekidding."

"We were twelve. What the hell."

"You're lucky you didn't get pregnant."

"I know. Twelve canbea dumb age."

He lookedaway. "Bet he didn't beat youasbadas he beat me!"

"He sent you boys over to play with the Talcotts." Igavehimaglassofcoldorangejuiceandpouredone for myself.

"I don't remember," he said.

"You were nine," I said. "Nobody was going to tell you what was going on. As I remember, I told you I felldownthebacksteps."

He frowned, perhapsremembering. My facehadbeenmemorable.Dadhadn'tbeatenmeasbadlyashe beat Keith, but I looked worse. He should remem berthat.

"HeeverbeatupMama?"

I shook my head. "No. I've never seenany sign of it.Idon'tthinkhewould.Helovesher,youknow.He really does."

"Bastard!"

"He'sourfather, and he's the best man I know."

"Did you think that when hebeat you?"

"No. But later when I figured out how stupid I'd been, Iwasjustgladhewassostrict. Andbackwhenithappened, I was just gla dhe didn't quite kill me. "Helaugheda gain--twiceinjustafewminutes, and both times at thingsI'd said. Maybe he was ready toopenupalittlenow.

"Tell me about the outside," I said. "Howdo you live out there?

He drained the last of hissecond glass of juice. "I told you. I live real good out there."

"But how did you live whenyou first went out-- when you went to stay."

Helookedatmeandsmiled. Hesmiledlikethat yearsagowhenheusedredinktotrickmeintobleedin gin empathy with a wound he didn't have. I rememberthat particularnasty smile.

"You want to go out yourself, don't you?" hedemanded.

"Someday."

"What, instead of marrying Curtisand having a bunch of babies?"

"Yeah. Instead of that."

"I wondered why you were beingso nice to me." The food smelled just about ready, so I got up andtook thebreadfromtheovenandbowlsfromthe cupboard. I wastempted to tell him to dishup hisownstew,butIkne whewouldspoonallthemeatout of the stew and leave nothin gbut potatoes and vegetablesfor the rest of us. So I served him and myself, covered the pot, left it on the lowest possible fire, and put a towel overthe bread.

I let him eat in peace for a while, though I thought the boys would becoming any time now, starving.

ThenIwasafraidtowaitanylonger."Talktome,Keith," I said. "I really want to know. How did you survive when you first went out there."

Hissmile this time was less evil. Maybe the food had mellowed him. "Slept in a cardboardbox for three daysandstolefood,"hesaid"Idon'tknowwhyI kept going back to that box. Couldhave slept in any old corner. Some kidscarry a piece of cardboard to sleepon--sotheywon'tberightdownonthe ground, youknow.

"Then I got a sleepsack from an old man. It was new, like he neverused it. Then I-- "

"You stole it?"

He gave me a look of scorn. "What you think I was going to do? I didn't have no money. Just had that gun-- Mama's 38."

Yes. He had brought it back to her three visitsago, along with twoboxesof ammunition. Of coursehe neversaidhowhegottheammunition--orhowhe gothisreplacementgun--aHeckler&Kochninemillimeter just like Dad's. He just showed up with thingsand claimed that if you had the money, you could buy anything outside. He had neve radmitted howhegot the money.

"Okay," I said. "So you stole a sleepsack. And youkeptstealingfood? It's awonderyoudidn't get caught."

"The old guy hadsomemoney. I used it to buy food. Then I startedwalking toward L.A."

That old dream of his. For reasons that make sense to him alone, he's always wanted to go to L.A. Any sanepersonwouldbethankfulforthetwentymilesthat separateu sfrom that oozingsore.

"He talked to you. He wasfriendly to you. And you shot him."

"WhatwasIsupposedtodo? WaitforGodtocomeand give me some money? What was I supposed to do?"

"Comehome."

"Shit."

"Doesn'titevenbotheryouthatyoutooksomeone's life--youkilledaman?"

He seemed to thinkabout that for a while. Then he shook his head. "It don't bother me," he said. "I was scaredat first, but then... after I did it, I didn't feel nothing. Nobody saw me do it. I just took his stuff and left him there. Besides, maybe he wasn't dead. Peopledon'talwaysdiejustbecauseyoushootthem."

"Youdidn'tcheck?"

"I just wanted hisstuff. He wascrazy anyway. Alaska!"

I didn't say any more to him, didn't ask any more questions. He talkeda little about meetingsomeguysand joiningupwiththem,thendiscoveringthateven though they were all older than he was, none of them could readorwrite. He was ahelp to them. Hemadetheirlivespleasanter. Maybethat's whythey didn't just wait until he was a sleep and kill himandtakehislootforthemselves.

After a while, he noticed that I wasn't saying anything, and he laughed. "You better marry Curtis and ma ke babies," he said. "Out there, outside, you wouldn't last a day. That hyperempathy shit of yourswould bringyoudownevenifnobodytouchedyou."

"You thinkthat," Isaid.

"Hey, I saw a guy get both of his eyesgougedout. After that, they set him on fire and watched himrunaro undandscreamandburn. Youthinkyoucouldstand to see that?"

"Yournewfriendsdidthat?" Iasked.

MONDAY, JULY 20, 2026

Keith came to see me today just before dark. HefoundmewalkinghomefromtheTalcotthouse whereCurtis hadbeenwishingmeaveryhappybirthday. We've been very careful, Curti sand I, butfromsomewhereoroth er,he'sgottenasupplyofcondoms. They're old fashioned, but they work. And there's an unused dark room in a corner of the Talcottgarage.

Keithscaredmeoutofaverysweetmood. Hecame frombehindtwohouseswithoutmakingasound. He hadalmo streachedmebefore Irealized someone was the reand turned to facehim.

Heraisedhishands, smiling. "Broughtyoua birthdaypresent," he said. He put something into my left hand. Money.

"Keith, no, give itto Cory."

"You give it to her. You want her to have it, you give it to her. I gave itto you."

I walkedhim to the gate, concerned that one of the watchers might spot him and shoot him. He was that muchtaller than he had been when he stopped livingwithus.Dadwashomesohewouldn'tcomein. I thanked him for the mon ey and told him I would give it to Cory. I wanted him to knowthat because I didn't want him to bring meanything else, ever.

He seemednot to mind. He kissed the sideof my face said, "Happy birthday," and went out. He stillhad Cory'skey,andalthoughDadknewhehadit, hehadn'thadthelockchangedagain.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 26, 2026

Today, my parents had to godowntown to identify the body of my brother Keith.

SATURDAY, AUGUST29, 2026

Ihaven'tbeenabletowriteawordsinceWed nesday. I don't knowwhat to write. The body was Keith's. I never saw it, of course. Dad said he tried tokeep Cory fromseeing it. The things someonehad done to Keith beforehedied. . . .I don't want to write about this, but I need to Sometimeswritingaboutathingmakes iteasierto stand.

Someonehad cut and burnedaway most of mybrother'sskin. Everywhere except his face. They burned out his eyes, but left the restof his face intact-- like they wanted him to be recognized. They cut and they cauterized and they cut and they cauterized. . .. Some of the wounds were days old. Someonehadan endless hat redof mybrother.

Dadgotusalltogetheranddescribedtouswhathad been done .He told it in a flat, dead monotone. He wanted to scare us, toscare Marcus, Bennett, and Gregory in particular. He wantedustounderstandjusth owdangeroustheoutsideis.

The police said drug dealers torture people the wayKeithwastortured. Theytorturepeoplewhostealfrom them andpeople who compete with them. We don'tknowwhetherKeithwasdoingeitherofthesethings. We just knowh e'sdead. His body was dumped across town fromhere in front of a burnedoutoldbuildingthatwasonceanursinghome. It wasdump edonthebrokenconcreteand abandonedseveralhoursafterKeithdied. It could have been dumped in one of the canyons and only the dogs would have found it. But some one wanted it to be found, wanted it to be recognized. Had one of his victims' relatives or friends managed to get even at last?

Thepoliceseemedtothinkweshouldknowwhokilled him. I got the feeling from their questions that they would have been happy to arrest Dado rCory or both of them. But they both lead very public lives, and neither had anyunexplained absences or other breaks in routine. Dozensof people could give them alibis. Of course, I said nothing about what Keith hadtoldmehehadbeendoing. Whatgoodwouldthat do? Hewasdead, and in a horrible way. By accident or by intent, all his vict Imswere avenged.

Wardell Parrish felt called upon to tell the policeaboutthebigfightDadandKeithhadhadlastyear.He'dheard it, of course. Half the neighborhood had heardit.Familyfightsareneighborhoodtheater--and Dad, the minist e r, after all!

IknowWardellParrishwastheonewhotoldthe cops. Hisyoungestniece Tanyaletthatmuchslip.

"UncleWard said hehated to mention it but. . . . " Oh, I'll bet he hated to mention it. Damned bastard!

But nobody backed him up. Thecopswent nosingaroundtheneighborhood, but no one else admitted know in ganything about a fight. After all, they knew Dad didn't kill Keith. And they knew the cops liked to solve cases by "discovering" evidence against whomever they decided must beguilty. Best to give them nothing. They never helped when people called for help. They came later, and more often than not, made ab adsituation worse.

Wehadtheservicetoday.DadaskedhisfriendReveren dRobinsonto take care of it. Dad just satwithCory andtherestofusandlookedbentandold. So old.

Cory cried all day, most of the time without making asound. She's been crying of fandons ince Wed nesday. Marcus and Dad tried to comfort her. Even I tried, though the way she looked at me. . . as though I had had so mething to do with Keith's death, as though she almost hat edme. I keep reaching out to her. I don't kno wwhat else to do. May be in time, she'll be able to for give me for not being her daughter, for being alive when her son is dead, for being Dad's daughter by some one else. . . ? I don't know.

Dadnever shed a tear. I've never seen him cry in my life. Today, I wish he would. I wish hecould.

CurtisTalcott sort of hung aroundwith me today, and we talkedand talked. I guess I needed to talk, andCurtiswaswillingtoputupwithme.

11

AnyChangemaybearseedsofbenefit.Seek them out.

AnyChangemaybearseedsofharm.Beware.

God is infinitely malleable. God is Change.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY,OCTOBER17,2026

Wearecomingapart.

The community, the families, individual family members. . . . We're a rope, breaking, a single strand at a time.

Therewasanotherrobberylastnight--oranattempted rob bery. I wish that was all. No garden theft this time. Three guyscame overthe wall and crowbarred their way into the Cruzhouse. The Cruz family, of course, has loud burglar alarms, barred windows, and security gates at all the doors just like the rest of us, but that doesn't seem to matter. When peopl ewant to come in, they come in. The thie vesus edsimple hand to ols-crowbars, hydraulic jacks, things anyone can get. Idon't know how they disabled the burglar alarm. I know they cut the electricalandphonelinestothehouse. That shouldn'thavematteredsincethealarmhadback-up batteries. Whateve relse they did,or whatever wentwrong, the alarm didn't go off. Andafterthethievesusedthecrowbaronthedoor, they walked into the kitchen and used it on Dorotea Cruz's seventy-five-year-oldgrand mother. The old ladywasalightsleeperandhadgottenintothehabit ofgettingupatnightandbrewingherselfacupof lemongrasstea. Herfamilysaysthat'swhatshe wascomingintothekitchentodowhenthethieves brokein.

ThenDorotea'sbrothersHectorandRubinQuintanilla, came running, guns in hand. They had the bedroom n earest to the kitchen and they heard allthenoise--thebreak-initselfandMrs.Quintanilla beingknockedagain stthekitchentableandchairs. They killed twoof the thieves. The third gotaway,perhapswounded. Therewas alotofblood.Butold Mrs.Quintanillawasdead.

ThisistheseventhincidentsinceKeithwaskilled. Moreandmorepeoplearecomingoverourwalltotake what we have, o rwhat they think we have. Seven intrusionsinto houseorgarden in less than two months-- in an 11 -householdcommunity. If this is what's happening to us, what must it be like forpeoplewhoarereallyrich--a lthoughperhapswith theirbigguns, privateamies of security guards, and up to date security equipment, they're better able to fight back. Maybe that's why we're gettingso much attention. We have a few stealables and we're not that well protected. Of the seven intrusions, three were successful. Thieves got in and out withsomething--acoupleofradios, asackofwalnuts, whe at flour, com meal, piecesof jewelry, an ancient TV, acomputer. ...If theycouldcarry it, they made off with it. If what Keith told me istrue, we're getting the poorerclass of thieveshere. No doubt thetougher, smarter, moreco urageousthieveshit storesandbusinesses. Butourlower-classthugsare killing us slowly.

Nextyear, I'llbe 18--oldenough, according to Dad, to stand a regula rnight watch. I wish I could do it now. As soonas I cando it, I will. But it won't been ough.

It'sfunny.CoryandDadhavebeenusingsomeofthe money Keith broughtu sto help the people who'vebeen robbed. Stolen money to help victims of theft. Half the money is hidden in our back yard incaseofdisaste r.Therehasalwaysbeensome moneyhiddenoutthere.Nowthere'senoughto makeadifference.Theotherhalfhas goneintothechu rch fund to helpour neighbors in emergencies. Itwon'tbeenough.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2026

Somethingnewisbeginning--orperhapssomethingold and nasty is reviving. A company called Kagimoto, Stamm, Frampton, and Company-- KSF-- hastakenovertherunningofasmallcoastalcitycalled Olivar. Olivar, incorporated in the 1980s, is justonemorebeach/bedroomsuburbofLosAngele s, small and well -to-do. It has little industry,muchhilly,vacantlandandashort,crumblingcoa stline. Its people, like some here in our Robledoneighborhood,earnsalariesthatwouldoncehavemade them pro sperousand comfortable. In fact,Olivarisalotricherthanweare,butsinceit'sa coastalcity,itstaxesarehigher,andsincesomeofits land is un stable, it has extra problems. Parts of it sometimescrumbleintotheocean,undercutordeeply saturated by salt water. Sea level kee psrisingwiththewarmingclimateandthereistheoccasionale arthquake. Olivar'sflat, sandy beach is already just a memory. So are the houses andbusinessesthatusedtositonthatbeach. Like co astalcities allover the world, Olivarneeds special help. It's an upper mid dle class, white, literate community of people who oncehad a lot of weight to throwaround. Now, not even the politiciansit's helped to elect will stand by it. The wholestate, the country, the worldneedshelp, it's been told. What the hell is tiny Olivar whining about? Somewhatricher and less geologically active communities are getting help--dikes, seawalls, evacuation assistance, whatever's appropriate. Olivar, located between these aand Los Angeles, is getting an influx of saltwater from one direction and desperate poor people from the other. It has a solar powered desalination plantons ome of its flatter, more stable land, and that provides its people with a dependable supply of water.

But it can't protect itself from the encroaching sea, the crumblingearth, the crumblingeconomy, or the desperate refugees. Even getting back and forth to work, for those fewwho can't work at home, was becomingasdangerous for themasit is for our people--akindofter riblegaunt let that has to be run over and over again.

Then the people of KSF showedup. After many promises, much haggling, suspicion, fear, hope, and legal wrangling, the voters and the officials of Olivar permitted their town to be taken over, bought out, privatized. KSF will expand the desalination plant to vast size. That plant will be the first of many. The company intends to dominate farming and the sellingofwaterandsolarandwindenergyovermuchofthe south west--whereforpenniesit's already bought vast tract sof fertile, waterlessland. So far, Olivar is one of its smaller coastal holdings, but with Olivar, it getsaneager,educatedworkforce,peopleafewyears older tha nI am whose optionsare very limited. Not as limitedasours, of course, but limited. And there's all that formerly public land that they now control. They mean toown great water, power, and agricultural industries in anarea that most people have given up on. They have long-term plans, andthepeopleofOlivarhavedecidedtobecomepartof them--toacceptsmallersala riesthantheir socio-economic group is used to in exchange for security, aguarante ed food supply, jobs, and help in their battle with the Pacific.

There are still people in Olivar who are uncomfortable with the change. They know about early American company towns in which the companies cheated and abused people.

But this is to be different. The people of Olivar aren't frightened, impoverished victims. They're able to lookafterthemselves, their rights and their property. They're educated people who don't want to live in the spreading chaos of the radio documentary we all listened to last night-- as they made a public spectacle of selling themselves to KSF.

"Good luck to them," Dad said. "Not that they'll have much luck in the long run."

"What do you mean?" Cory demanded. "I think the wholeideaiswonderful.It'swhatweneed.Nowifonly some bi gcompany would want to do the samething withRobledo.

"No," Dadsaid. "Thank God,no."

"You don't know! Why shouldn't they?"

"Robledo'stoobig,toopoor,tooblack,andtoo Hispanictobeofinteresttoanyone--andithasnocoa stline. What it does haveisstreet poor,bodydumps,andamemoryofoncebeingwell-off--ofshade trees, big houses, hills, and canyons. Most of those things are still here, but no company will want us."

Attheendoftheprogramitwasannouncedthat KSFwaslookingforregisterednurses, credentialed teachers, and afewotherskilledprofessionals who would be willing to move to Olivar and work for room and board. The offer wasn't put that way, of course, but that's what it meant. Yet Cory recorded the phonenumber and calleditatonce. She and Dad are both teachers, both Ph.D's. She was desperate toget in a head of the crowd. Dadjusts hrugged and let her call.

Shemadeasharp, wordless sound of disgust. "You known othing about the world. You thinky ou have all the answers but you known othing!"

I didn't argue. Therewasn't much point in my arguingwithher.

"I doubt that Olivar is looking for families of blacks and Hispanics, anyway," Dad said. "The Balters or the Garfieldsorevensome of the Dunnsmight getin, but I don't think we would. Even if I were tru sting enough to put my family into KSF's hands, they wouldn't haveus."

"We could try it," Cory insisted. "We should!We wouldn't be any worse off than weare now if they turn usdown. And if we got in and we didn't like it,wecouldcomebackhere.Wecouldrentthehouse tooneofthe bigfamilieshere--chargethemjustalittle, then--"

"Thencomebackherejoblessandpenniless," Dadsaid. "No. I mean it. This business sounds half antebellum revival andh alf science fiction. I don't trust it. Freedom is dangerous, Cory, but it's precious, too. You can't just throw it away or let it slipaway. You can't sell it for bread and pottage." Cory staredat him-- just stared. Herefused to look away. Cory got up andwent to their bedroom. I sawherthereafewminuteslater, sittingonthebed, cra dling the urn of Keith's ashes, and crying.

Marcustellsme the Garfieldsare trying to get into

Olivar.He'sbeenspendingalotoftimewithRobin

Balter and she told him. She hatesthe ideabecauseshelikeshercousin Joanneal ot better than she does her two isters. She's a fraid that if Joanne goesawaytoOlivar,she'llneverseeheragain.I suspectshe'sright.

I can't imagine thisplace without the Garfields. Joanne, Jay, Phillida. . . . We've lost individuals before, of course, butwe'venever lost awhole family. I mean. . . they'll be alive, but. . . they'll begone.

I hope they're refused. I knowit's selfish, but I don't care. Not that it makes any differencewhat I hope. Oh hell. I hope they get whateverwill bebest for their survival. I hope they'll be all right.

At 13, my brother Marcushas becomethe only person in the family whom I wouldcall beautiful. Girlshisag estareathimwhentheythinkhe's not looking. They giggleal otaround himandchase him like crazy, but he sticks to Robin. She's not pretty at all--allskin and bones and brains--butshe's funnyand sen sible. In a year or two, she'll start to fill out and my brother will get beauty along with all those brains. Then, if the two of them are still together, their lives will get a lot more interesting.

I've changed my mind. I used to wait for the explosion, the bigcrash, the sudden chaos that would destroy the neighborhood. Instead, things are unraveling, disinte grating bit by bit. Susan Talcott

BruceandherhusbandhaveappliedtoOlivar. Otherpeoplearetalkingaboutapplying,thinkingabout it. There's a small college in Oliva r. There are lethalse curity devices to keep thugs and the street poor out. There are more jobsopening up. . . . Maybe Olivar is the future-- one face of it. Cities controlled by big companies are old hat in science fiction. My grandmother left a whole book case of oldscience fiction novels. The company-city subgenre always seemed to staraherowhoouts marted, over threw, or escaped "the company." I've never seenonewheretheherofoughtlikehelltogettakenin and underpaid by the company. In real life, that's the way it will be. That's the way it is.

And what should I be doing? What can I do? In less than ayear, I'llbe 18, an adult -- an adult with no prospects except life in our disintegrating neighborhood. O rEarthseed.

To begin Earthseed, I'll have to go outside. I've known that for a longtime, but the idea scaresme just as muchasit alwayshas.

Next year whenI'm 18, I'll go. That meansnow IhavetobegintoplanhowI'llhandleit.SATURDAY, OCTOBER31,2026

I'm going to go north. My grandparents once traveled a lot by car. They left us old roadmapsof just about every county in the state plus several of other parts of the country. The newest of them is 40 years old, but that doesn't matter. The roadswill still be there. They'll just be in worse shape than theywerebackwhenmygrandparentsdrovea gas-fueledcarover them. I've put mapsof the California counties northofus and the few I could find of WashingtonandOregoncountiesintomy pack.

Iwonderiftherearepeopleoutsidewhowillpayme toteachthemreadingandwriting--basicstuff--or peoplewho willpaymetoreadorwriteforthem. Keith started me thinkin gabout that. I might even be able to teach some Earthseed verses along with the reading and writing. Given any chance at all, teaching is what I wouldcho ose to do. Even if I have to take other kinds of work to get enough to eat, I can teach. If I do it well, it will drawpeople to me-- to Earthseed.

All successful life is Adaptable, Opportunistic, Tenacious, Interconnected, and Fecund.

Understand this. Use it.

Shape God.

I wrote that verse a few monthsago. It's true like all the verses. It seems more true than evernow, more useful to me when I'm afraid.

I've finally got a title for my book of Earthseed verses-- Earthseed: The Book of the Living. There aretheTibetanandtheEgyptianBooksoftheDead.Dadh ascopiesof them. I've never heard of anything calle d a book of the living, but I wouldn't be surprised to discover that there is something. I don'tcare. I'm trying tospeak-- towrite-- the truth. I'm trying to be clear. I'm not interested in beingfancy, or evenoriginal. Clarity and truthwill be plenty, if I can only achieve them. If it happens that there are otherpeopleoutsidesomewherepreachingmytruth, I'll join them. Otherwise, I'll adapt where I must, take whatopportunities I canfindormake, hangon, gatherstudents, and teach.

12

We are Earthseed

The life that perceives itself

Changing.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2026

TheGarfieldshavebeenacceptedatOlivar.

They'll be movingnext month. That soon. I've known them all my life, and they'll be gone. Joanneand I have had our differences, but we grewup together. I thought somehow that when I left, she would still be here. Everyone would still be here, frozen in time just as I left them. But no, that's fantasy. God isChange.

"Do you want to go?" I askedher this morning. Wehadgottentogethertopickafewearlylemonsand navelora ngesandsomepersimmons, almostripeand brilliant orange. We picked at my house, and thenathers, enjoyingthework. Theweatherwas cool. Itwasgoodtobeoutside.

"I have to go," she said. "What elseisthere for me-- for anyone. It's all goingto hell here. You knowit is." I stared at her. I guess discussing such thingsis all right now that shehasaway out. "So you move intoanoth erfortress," Isaid.

"It'sabetterfortress.Itwon'thavepeoplecomingover the walls, killing old ladies."

"Your mothersaysall you'll have isanapartment. No yard. No garden. You'llhave less money, but you'll have to use more of it to buy food."

"We'll manage!" There was abrittle quality to her voice.

I put down the old rake I wasusingasa fruit picker.

Itworkedfineonthelemonsandoranges."Scared?"I asked.

She put down herownreal fruit picker with its awkwardextensionhandleandsmallfruit-catching basket. Itwasbestforpersimmons. Shehugged herself. "I've livedhere, livedwithtrees and gardensall my life . I. . . don't know how it will be to be shut up in an apa rtment. It does scare me, but we'll manage. We'll have to."

"You cancomeback here if thingsaren't what youhope. Yourgrandparents and your aunt's family will still be here.

"Harry will still be here," shewhispered, lookingtowardherhouse. Iwouldhavetostopthinkingofitas the Ga rfield house. Harry and Joanne were at leasta scloseas Curtisand I. I hadn't thought about her leaving him-what that must be like. I like Harry Balter. Iremember being surprised when heand Joanne first started going together. They'd lived in the samehouse all their lives. I had thought of Harry almostasher brother. But they were only first cousins, and against the odds, they had managed to fall in love. Or I thought they had. They hadn't gonewith anyone else for years. Everyone assumed they would get around to marryin gwhen they were a little older.

"Marry him and take himwith you," I said.

"He won't go," shesaid in that same whisper. "We've talkedand talkedabout it. He wants me to stay here with him, get married soonand gonorth. Just. . .go with no prospects. Nothing. It's crazy."

"Why won't he go to Olivar?"

"He thinks the way your fatherdoes. He thinksOlivar'satrap.He'sreadaboutnineteenthandearlytwentieth century compa ny towns, and hesays no matter how great Olivar looks, all we'll get from it intheendisdebt andlossoffreedom."

I knewHarry had sense. "Jo," I said, "you'll be of age next year. You couldstay here with the Balters until then and marry. Or you could talkyour fatherinto letting you marry now."

"And then what? Gojoin the street poor? Stay and stuff more babies into that crowded house. Harrydoe sn'thaveajob, and there's no real chance of his getting one that pays money. A rewe supposed to live on what Harry's parentsearn? What kind of future is that? None! None at all!"

Sensible. Conservative and sensible and mature and wrong. Verymuchincharacterfor Joanne.

OrmaybeIwastheonewhowaswrong.Maybethesecurity Joanne will find in Olivar is the only kind of se curitytobehadforanyonewhoisn'trich.Tome,though, security in Olivar isn 't much more attractive than the s ecurity Keith has finally found in hisurn.

Ipickedafewmorelemonsandsomeorangesand wonderedwhatshewoulddoifsheknewIwasalso planningto leavenextyear. Wouldsheruntoher motheragain, frightenedforme, and eagertohavesomeonep rotect me from myself? She might. She wantsafutureshecanunderstandanddependon--a future that looks a lot likeh er parents' present. I don't think that'spossible. Thingsare changing toomuch,toofast. WhocanfightGod?

We put baskets of fruit inside my back door on the porch, then headed for her house.

I shruggedand lied. "I don't know. If I marry anyone, it will be Curtis. But I don't knowabout marrying. I don't want to have childrenhereany more thanyoudo. Iknowwe'llbestayinghereforawhilelonger, though. Dad won't let Cory evenapply to Olivar. I'm glad of that beca use I don't want to go there. But there'll be other Olivars. Who knowswhat I might wind updoing?" That last didn't feel like a lie.

"You think there'll be more privatized cities?" sheasked.

"Bound to be if Olivar succeeds. This country is going to be parceled out as a source of cheap labor and cheap land. When people like those in Olivar beg to sell themselves, our surviving cities are bound to wind up the economic colonies of whoever can afford to buy them."

[&]quot;What will you do?" she asked me as we walked.

[&]quot;Are you just going to stay here? I mean. . . are you going to stay andmarry Curtis?"

"Oh, God, there yougoagain. You've alwaysgot a disasterupyoursleeve."

"I see what'sout there. You see it too. You just deny it."

"Rememberwhenyouthoughtstarvinghordeswere goingtocomecrawlingoverourwallsandwewouldhave to run away to the mountain sand eat grass?" Did I remember? I turned to faceher, first angry-- furious--thentomyownsurprise, sad. "I'llmissyou," I said.

She must have read my feelings. "I'm sorry," shewhispered.

Wehuggedeachother.Ididn'taskherwhatshe wassorryfor,andshedidn'tsayanymore.TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2026

Daddidn'tcomehometoday. Hewasduethis morning.

I don't knowwhat that means. I don't knowwhat to think. I'm scaredto death.

Corycalled the college, his friends, fellow ministers, co-workers, the cops, the hospitals. . . .

Nothing. Heisn'tunderarrestorsickorinjuredor dead--atleastnotas farasanyoneknows. Noneof hisfriendsor colleagues hadseen himsince heleft workearlythismorning. His bikewas working all right. Hewas allright.

Hehadriddenofftowardhomewiththree

co-workerswholivedinotherneighborhoodsinour area. Each of thesesaid thesamething: That they had left him asusual at River Street where it intersects Durant Road. That'sonly five blocks from here. We're at the tip-end of Durant Road.

Sowhereishe?

Today a group of us, allarmed, rode bicyclesfromhometoRiverStreetanddownRiverStreettothe college. Fivemilesinall.Wecheckedsidestreets, alleys, vacant buil dings, every place we could think of. I went. I took Marcuswith me because if I hadn't, hewouldhavegoneoutalone. IhadtheSmith& Wesson. Marcushado nlyhisknife. He'squickandagile with it, and strong for his age, but he'sn ever usedit on anything alive. If anything had happened to him, I don't think I would have dared to gohome. Cory is alreadyout of her min dwith worry. All this on top of losing Keith. . . . I don't know. Everyone helped. Jay Garfieldwill be leavin g soon, but that didn't stop him from leading the search. He'sa good man. He did everything he could think of to find Dad. Tomorrowwe'regoingintothehillsandcanyons.

We have to. Noone wants to, but what else can wedo?

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 18,

2026

I'veneverseenmoresqualor, morehumanremains, more feral dogs than I saw today. I have to write. I have to dump thisonto paper. I can't keep it insideofme. Seeingthedeadhas neverbothered mebefore, but thi s. ...

WewerelookingforDad'sbody,ofcourse,thoughno on esaid so. I couldn't deny that reality or avoid thinkingaboutit.Corycheckedwiththepoliceagain,with the hospitals, with eve ryonewe could think ofwhokn ew Dad.

Nothing.

So we had to go to the hills. Whenwe go for target practice, we don't lookaround, except to insure safety. We don't lookforwhat we'd rathernot find. Today in groupsof threeorfour, we combed through the areanearest to the top of River Street. I kept Marcuswith me--which was not easy. What is it inyoung boysthatmakesthemwanttowanderoff aloneandgetkilled? Theygettwochinhairs and they're trying to prove they're men.

"You watch my back and I'll watch yours," I said. "I'm not going to let you get hurt. Don't you let me down."Hegavemethekindofnear-smilethatsaidheknewexactly what I was trying to do, and that he was going to do a she pleased. I got mad and grabbedhimbytheshoulders.

"Damnit, Marcus, howmany sisters have you got? How many fathers have you got!" I never used even mild profanity with him unless thingswere very serious. Now, it gothisattention.

"Don't worry," he muttered. "I'll help."

Thenwefoundthearm.Marcuswastheonewhospotted it-- som ethingdark lying just off the trail wewere following.Itwashungupinthelowbranchesof ascruboak.

Thearmwasfreshandwhole--ahand, alower, and anupperarm. Ablackman's arm, just the color of myfather's where color could be seen. It was sla shed and cut all over, yet still powerful looking-- long-boned, long-finge red, yet muscular and massive. . . . Familiar?

Smooth, whitebonestuckout at the should erend. The armhad been cut off with a sharp knife. The bon e wasn't broken. And, yes. It could have been his.

Marcusthrewupwhenhesawit.Imademyselfexamine it, search it for something familiar, for certainty. Jay Garfield tried to stop me, and I shoved him away and tol dhim to go to hell. I'm sorry for that, and I told him so later. But I had to know. Andyet,Istilldon'tknow. Thearmwastooslashedandcovered in dried blo od. I couldn't tell. Jay Garfield tookfingerprintsinhispocketnotebook,butweleft thearmitself. Howcouldwet akethatbacktoCory? And we kept searching. What else could we do?

George Hsu found a rattlesnake. It didn't bite anyone and we didn't kill it. I don't think anyone was in a mood to kill things.

We sawdogs, but they kept away from us. I even saw a cat watchingus from under a bush. Catseither runlikehellorcrouchandfreeze. They're interesting to watch, somehow. Or, at any other time, they'dbeinteresting.

Then someone began to scream. I've never heardscreamslikethatbefore--onandon.Aman,screaming, beg ging, praying: "No! Nom ore! Oh,God,nomore,please.Jesus,Jesus,Jesus,please!"Thentherewerewordless, gratingcriesandhigh, horriblemewling.

It was a man's voice, not like my father'sbut not that different from his. We couldn't locate the source. Theechoesbouncedaroundthecanyon, confusingus, sendingus firstinonedirection, theninanother. The canyon was fulloflooserock and spiny, vicious plants that keptus on the pathways where there were pathways.

Thescreamingstopped, then began again as a kind of horrible, bubbling noise.

I had let myself fall back to the end of the line of us by then. I wasn't in trouble. Sound doesn't trigger my sharing. I havetosee another person in pain before Idoanysharing. And this was one I'd do anything to avoid seeing.

Marcusdroppedbackbesidemeandwhispered,

"Youokay?"

"Yeah," I said. "I just don't want to knowanything about what'shappening to that man.

"Keith," hesaid.

"I know," I agreed.

Wewalkedourbikesbehindtheothers, watchingtheback trail. Kayla Talcott dropped back to see if we were all right. She hadn't wantedu sto come, butsincewehadcome, shehadcome, shehadkeptan eyeonus. She'slikethat.

"It doesn't sound like your daddy," shesaid. "Doesn't sound like himat all." Kayla is from Texas like my biologicalmother. Sometimes shesounded as though she'd never left, and sometimes she soundedasthoughshe'dneverbeennearanypartof the south. She seemed to bea ble to turn the accent on andoff. She tended to turn it on for comforting people, and for threatening to kill them. Sometimeswhen I'm with Curtis, Isee her in hisfaceandwonderwhatkindofrelative--whatkindof mother-in-law--shewould make. TodayIthinkboth MarcusandIweregladshewasthere. Weneeded tobeclosetosomeonewithherkindof mothering strength.

Thehorriblenoiseended. Maybethepoorman was dead and out of his misery. I hope so.

Weneverfoundhim. We found human bones and animal bones. We found the rotting corps es of five peoples cattered among the boulders. We found the coldremainsofafirewithahumanfemurandtwo humanskullslyingamongtheashes.

Atlast, we came home and wrapped our community wall around us and huddled in our illusion sofsecurity.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 2026

No one has found my father. Almost every adult intheneighborhoodhasspentsometimelooking. Richard Mossdidn't, buthisoldestsonanddaughter did. Wardell Parrishdidn't, buthissisterandoldestnephew did. I don't kno wwhat else peoplecould have done. If I did know, I would be out doing it.

And yet nothing, nothing! The police never cameupwith any sign of him. He neverturned up anywhere. He's vanished, gone. Eventhese vered arm's finger prints weren'this.

Every night since Wednesday, I've dreamed that horrible screaming. I've gone out twice more withteams huntingthroughthecanyons. We'vefoundnothing but more of the dea dand thepoorest of theliving--people whoareallstaringeyesandvisible bones. Myownbonesachedinempathy. Sometimesiffsleepforawhilewithouth earingthescreaming, I see the se-- the living dead. I've always seenthem. I've never seen them.

A team I wasn't with found a living child beingeaten by dogs. The team killed thedogs, then watched, helpless as the boydied.

I spoke at servicesthis morning. Maybe it was my duty. I don't know. Peoplecamefor church, all uncertainand upset, not knowing what they should do. I think they wanted to drawtogether, and they had years of habit drawing them together at ourhouseonSundaymorning. Theywereuncertainandhesita nt, but they came.

Both Wyatt Talcott and Jay Garfield offered tospeak. Bothdidsayafewwords, bothinformallyeulogizing my father, though neithe radmitted that that waswhat they were doing. I was afraideveryonewoulddothatand theservicewould becomeanimpossible impromptufuneral. When I stoodup, it wasn't just to say a couple of words. I meant to give them something they could take home-- something that might make them feel that enoughhad been said fortoday.

Ithankedthemallfortheongoing--emphasizeongoin g-- efforts to find my father. Then. . .well, thenItalked aboutperseverance. Ipreached as emonabout perseverance if an unordained kid can be said to preach a serm on. No onewas going to stopme. Cory was theo nly one who might have tried, but Corywas in akindof walking coma. Shewasn't doing anything shedidn't have to do.

So I preached from Luke, chapter eighteen, verses onethrougheight:theparableoftheimportunate widow.It'soneI'vealwaysliked.Awidowisso persistent,inher demandsforjusticethatshe overcomestheresistanceofajudgewhofears neitherGodnorman.Shewearshimd own.Moral: Th eweakcan overcomethe strong if the weakpersist. Persistingisn't always safe, but it'soften necessary.

Myfatherandtheadultspresenthadcreated and maintaine dour community in spite of the scarcity and the violence outside. Now, with my fatheror without him, that community had to go on, hold together, survive. I talked about my nightmares and the source of those nightmares. Some people might not have wanted their kids to hear things like that, but I didn't care. If Keith had known more, may be he would still be alive. But I didn't mention Keith. PeoplecouldsaywhathappenedtoKeithwashisownfault.No one could say that about Dad. I didn't want anyone to be able to say it about this community someday.

"Those nightmares of mine are our future if we fail one another," I said, windingup. "Starvation, agonyat thehandsofpeoplewhoaren'thumananymore. Dismemberment.Death.

"WehaveGodandwehaveeachother.Wehave ourislandcommunity,fragile,andyetafortress. Sometimesitse emstoosmallandtooweakto survive. And like the widow in Christ's parable, its enemies fearneither Godnorman. But also like the widow, it persists. We persist. This is our place, no matter what."

That was my message. I left it there, hanging before them with an unfinished feel to it. I could feel them expecting more, then realizing that I wasn't going to say more, then biting down onwhat I had said.

At just the right moment, Kayla Talcott began an old song. Others took it up, singingslowly, but with feeling: "We shall not, weshall not be moved. . . . "

I think this might have sounded weakor even pitifulsomehowifithadbeenbegunbyalesservoice. Ithink I might have sang it wea kly. I'm only a fair singer. Kayla, on the otherhand, has a big voice, beautiful, clear, and able to do everything sheaks of it. Also, Kayla has a reputation forn ot moving unless shewants to.

Later, as shewas leaving, I thanked her.

She looked at me. I'd grown past her yearsago, and shehad to lookup. "Good job," she said, and nodd ed and walkedaway towardher house. I loveher.

Igotothercomplimentstoday, and Ithinktheyweresin cere. Most said, in one way or another, "You're right," and "I didn't knowyou could preach like that," and "Your fatherwould be proud of you."

Yeah. I hope so. I did it for him. He built this bunch of houses into a community. And now, he's probably dead. I wouldn't let them bury him, but I know. I'm nogoodat denial and self-deception. That was Dad's funeral that I was preaching--his and the community's. Beca use asm uch as I want all that I said to be true, it isn't. We'll be moved, all right. It's just a matter of when, by whom, and in howmany pieces.

13

Thereisnoend

To what a living world

Will demand of you.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 19, 2026

Today ReverendMatthew Robinson in whosechurch I wasbaptized came to preach my father's funeral.Corymadethearrangements.Therewasno body,nourn.Nooneknowswhathappenedtomyfather. Neither wen or the policehave been able tofindout.We'resurehe'sdead.Hewouldfindaway tocomehomeif hewerealive,sowe'recertainhe's dead.

No, we'renot certain. We're not certain at all. Is he sick somewhere? Hurt? Held against his will for who knows what reason by who knows what monsters?

ThisisworsethanwhenKeithdied.Somuchworse.As horriblea sthat was, we knewhe wasdead. Whatever he suffered, we knewhewasn't suffering any more. Not in thisworld, anyway. Weknew.Now,we don't know anything. He is dead. But we don't know!

TheDunnsmusthavefeltthiswhenTracyvanished.Cra zy as theyare, crazyasshe was, they must have felt this. What do they feel now. Tracy nevercame back. If she'snot dead, what must behappeningtoheroutsid e?Agirlaloneonlyfacedonekindof futureoutside. Iintendtogooutposingasamanwhen I go.

How will they all feel when I go? I'll be dead to them-- to Cory, the boys, the neighborhood. They'llhope I'mdead,consideringthesupposed alternative. Thank Dadformytallness and my strength.

I won't have to leave Dad now. He'salready left me.Hewas57.Whatreasonwouldstrangershavefor kee pinga57-year-oldmanalive?Oncethey'drobbed him, they would either let him go or kill him. If they let him go, he'd com ehome, walking, limping, crawling.

α 1		1 1	1 1	11 /1	41 4
\sim	nρ	CA	മവ	 hat'c	that
\mathbf{v}	ш	ou	ıcau	 'hat's	uiai

It hasto be.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 22, 2026

The Garfields left for Olivar today-- Phillida, Jay, and Joanne. An armored KSF truck came from Olivar tocollectthemandtheirbelongings. Theadultsofthecommunity had all they coul ddo to keep the littlekidsfrom climbingalloverthetruckandpesteringthe drivers to death. Most kid smy brothers' ages have never been close to a truck that runs. Some oftheyoungerMosskidshaveneverseenatruckofany kind. The Moss kid s weren't even allowed to visitthe Yannishouse backwhen the Yannistelevision still worked.

ThetwoguysfromKSFwerepatientoncethey realized the kidsweren't thieves or vandals. Those two guyswith their uniforms, pistols, whips, and clubs, looked more like cops than movers. No doubt they had even more su bstantialweaponsinthetruck. My brother Bennett sai dhe saw biggergunsmountedinsidethetruckwhenhe climbedontothe hood. Butwhenyouconsiderhowmuchatruckthatsize is worth, andh ow many people might want to relieve them of it and its contents, I guess theweaponryisn'tsurprising.

Thetwomoverswereablackandawhite,andIcould see that Cory con sidered that hopeful. MaybeOlivarwo uldn'tbethewhiteenclavethatDadhad expected.

Cory cornered the blackguy and talked to him foraslongashewouldlether. Willshetrynowtogetusinto Olivar? I think she will. After all, without Dad's salary, she'llhavetodosomething. Idon't think we have a praye rofbeing accepted. The insurance companyisn't going to pay--ornot for a long time. Its people choose not to believe that Dad is dead. Without proof he can't be declared legally dead for seven years. Can they hold on to our money for that long? I don't know, but it wouldn't surprise me. We could starve many times over inseven years. And Corymustknowsheal one can't earnen oughin Olivar to feed and house us. Is she hoping to get work for me, too? I don't know what we're going to do.

JoanneandIcriedallovereachother, saying good-bye. We promised to phone each other, to stay in touch. I don't thinkwe'll beable to. It costs extra to call Olivar. We won't be able to afford it. I don't think she will either. Chances are, I'll never see her again. The people I've grown upwith are falling out of my life, one by one.

Afterthetruckpulledaway, Ifound Curtisandtookhim back to the old darkroom to make love. We hadn't d one it for a long time, and I needed it. I wish Icouldimaginejustmarrying Curtis, stayinghere, and having ad e cent life with him.

It isn't possible. Even if there were no Earthseed, itwouldn'tbepossible. Iwouldalmost bedoing the family a favor if I left now-- one less mouth to feed. Unless I could somehow get a job. . . .

"We've got to get out of here, too," Curtis saidaswe lay together afterward, lingering, tempting fate, not wanting to lose the feel of each other so soon. But that wasn't what hehad meant. I turned my head to look at him.

"Don't you want to go?" heasked. "Wouldn't you like to get out of this dead endneighborhood, out of Robledo.

I nodded. "I was just thinking that. But--"

"I want you to marry me, and I wantusto get out ofhere,"hesaidinanearwhisper."Thisplaceisdying."

lookeddownat him. The only light in the roomcame from a single window up near the ceiling. Nothing covered it any more, and the glass was broken out of it, but still, only a little light came in. Curtis's face was full ofshado ws.

"Where do you want to go?" I asked him.

"Not Olivar," he said. "That could turn out to be abiggerdeadendthanlivinghere."

"Where, then?"

"Idon'tknow.OregonorWashington?Canada? Alaska?"

I don't think I gave any sign of sudden excitement. People tell me my face doesn't showthem what I'm feeling. Mysharinghas been a hardteacher. Buthe sawsomething.

"You've alreadybeen thinkingabout leaving, haven't you," he demanded. "That'swhy you won't talk about getting married."

Irestedmyhandonhissmoothchest.

"Youwerethinkingaboutgoingalone!"Hegraspedmy wrist, seeme dready to push it away. Thenhe held on to it, kept it. "You were just going to walk away fromhereand leave me."

Iturnedsothathecouldn'tseemyfacebecausenow I had a feeling my emotion swere all too obvious:Confus ion, fear, hope. . . . Of course I had intended to go alone, and of course I hadn't told anyone that I was leaving. And I had not decided yethowDad's disappearance would affect mygoing. That rai sed frightening questions. What are my responsibilities? What will happen to my brothers if Ileavethemto Cory? They're hersons, and she'll move the earth to take care of them, keep them fed and clothed and housed. But can she do italone? How?

"I want to go," I admitted, moving around, trying tobecomfortableonthepalletofoldsleepsacksthatwe had put down on the concrete floor. "I planned to go. Don't tell anyone."

"Howcan I if I go with you?"

I smiled, loving him. But.... "Cory and my brothers are going to need help," I said. "When my father was here, I planned to go next year when I'm 18. Now.

.I don't know."

"Wherewereyougoing?"

"North. Maybe asfar asCanada. Maybe not."

"Alone?"

"Yeah."

"Why?" Why alone, he meant.

I shrugged. "I couldget killedassoonasI leavehere.Icouldstarve.Thecopscouldpickmeup.Dog scould get me. I could catch a disease. Anything couldhappen to me; I've thought about it. I haven't namedhalf the badpossibilities."

"That's why you needhelp!"

"That's why I couldn't ask anyone else to walkawayfromfoodandshelterandasmuchsafetyasthereis inour world. Tojuststartwalkingnorth, andhope youwindupsomeplacegood. HowcouldIaskthatof you?"

"It's not that bad. Farther north, we can getwork."

"Maybe. But people have been flooding north for years. Jobsare scarceupthere, too. And statelinesandb ordersareclosed."

"There'snothingdownhere!"

"I know."

"SohowcanyouhelpCoryandyourbrothers?"

"I want to marry you," I said. I hesitated, and therewas absolutes ilence. I couldn't believe I'dheard myself say such a thing, but it was true. Maybe I was ju st feeling bereft. Keith, my father, the Garfields, Mrs. Quintanilla. . .. People could disappear so easily. I wanted some one with me who cared about me, and who wouldn't disappear. But my judgement wasn't entirely gone.

"When my family is backonits feet, we'll marry," I said. "Then wecan get out of here. I just have to know that my brotherswill be all right."

"If we're going to marry anyway, why not do it now?" Because I have thingsto tell you, I thought. Because if you reject me or make mereject you with your reactions, I don't want to have to hangaround a ndwatchyouwithsomeoneelse.

"Not now," Isaid. "Wait for me,"

Heshookhisheadinobviousdisgust."Whatthehell doyouthinkI'vebeendoing?"

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 24, 2026

It'sChristmasEve.

Last night someoneset fire to the Payne-Parrish house. While the community tried to put out the fire, and then tried to keepit from spreading, three otherhouseswererobbed. Ourswasone of the three. This vestookall ourstore-bought food: wheat flour, sugar,cannedgoods,packagedgoods....They tookourradio--ourlastone. Thecrazythingis, befor ewe went to bed we had been listening to ahalf-hournewsfeatureaboutincreasingarson. People are settingm ore fires to cover crimes-- althoughwhy they would bother these days, I don't know. The policeare no threat to criminals. Peoplearesettingfirestodowhatourarsonistdidlastnight-- to get the neighbors of the arson victim to leavetheirownhomesunguarded. Peoplearesetting fires to get rid of whomever they dislike from person alenemiestoanyonewholooksorsounds foreignorracially different. Peoplearesetting fires because they're frustrated, angry, hopeless. They have no power to improve their lives, but they have the power to make others even more miserable. And the only way to prove to yourself that you have power is to use it.

Thenthere's that fired rugwith its dozenor so name s: Blaze, fuego, flash, sunfire. . . . The most popular name is pyro--shortforpyromania,It'sall thesamedrug,andit'sbeenaroundforawhile.From what Keith said, it's be coming morepopula r. Itmakeswatchingtheleaping,changingpatternsoffire a better, more intense, longer-la sting high thansex.LikeParacetco,mybiologicalmother'sdrugof choice,pyroscrewsaroundwithpeople's neurochemi stry. But Paracetco beganasa legitimatedrugintendedtohelpvictimsof Alzheimer'sdisease.Pyrowasanaccident.Itwasahome -brew-- aba sement drug inventedby someonewhowastryingtoassembleoneoftheother higher-pricedstreetdrugs. Theinventormadeavery smallchemicalmistake, and wound up with pyro. That happened on the east coast and caused an immediate increase in the number of sensele ssarson fires, large and small.

Pyro workedits way west without making nearly as much troubleasit could have. Now its popularity is growing. And indry-as-straw southern California, itcancausearealorgyofburning.

"MyGod,"Corysaidwhentheradioreportwasover. And in a small, whi spery voice, she quoted from the Book of Revelation: "Babylon thegreat is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils. . . . " And the devils set fire to the Payne-Parrish house.

At about two a.m. I awoke to the jangling of the bell: Emergency! Earthquake? Fire? Intruders?

But there was noshaking, no unfamiliar noise, nosmoke. Whateverwashappening, itwasn'tatour house. Igot up, threwclothingon, debated for a second whether to snatch my survival pack, then leftit. Our house didn't seem to be inimmediated anger. Mypackwassa feinthe closet, mixedina mongblankets and bundle sof old cloth es. If I had to haveit, I could come back and snatchit in seconds.

Iranoutsidetoseewhatwasneeded,andsawatonce. The Payne-Parrish hou se was fully involved,surrounde dbyfire. One of the watchers on dutywas still sounding the alarm. People spilled from all the houses, and must have se enas I did that the Payne-Parrishhousewasatotalloss. Neighbors werealreadywettingdownthehousesoneither side. Aliveoak tree--oneofourhuge, ancient ones--wasafire. Therewasalightwindblowing, swirlingbitsofburningleaves and twigs into the air and scattering them. I joined the people who were beating and wetting the grounds.

WherewerethePaynes?WherewasWardell Parrish?Hadanyonecalledthefiredepartment?Ahouse full of people, after all, it wasn't like a burni nggarage.

I asked several people. Kayla Talcott said she had called them. I was grateful andashamed. I wouldn't have asked if Dad werestill with us. One of us would have just called. Now we couldn't afford tocall.

NoonehadseenanyofthePaynes.WardellParrish IfoundintheYannisyardwhereCoryandmy brotherBennett werewrappinghiminablanket.He wascoughingsomuchthathecouldn'ttalk,and wearingonlypajamapants.

"Isheokay?" Iasked.

"He breathed a lot of smoke," Cory said. "Hassomeonecalled--"

"Kayla Talcott called the fire department."

"Good. But no one's at the gate to let them in."

"I'll go."Iturnedaway, but she caught my arm.

"The others?"she whispered. She meant the Paynes, of course.

"I don't know."

Shenoddedandletmego.

I went to the gate, borrowing Alex Montoya's key on the way. He always seemed to have his gate key in his pocket. It was because of him that I didn't gobackintoourhouseandmaybeinterruptarobbery andbe killedformytrouble.

Firefighters arrived in no great hurry. I let them in, locked the gate after them, and watchedasthey put out the fire.

NoonehadseenthePaynes. We could only assume they had nevergotten out. Cory tried to take Wardell Parrish to ourhouse,but he refused to leave untilhefoundoutonewayortheotherabouthis twinsisterandhisniecesandnephews.

Whenthefirewasalmostout, the bellbegantoring again. We all looked around . Caroline Balter, Harry's mother, was jerking and pushing at the belland screaming.

"Intruders!" she shouted. "Thieves! They've broken into the houses!"

Andweallrushedwithoutthinkingbacktoourhouses. Wardell Parrish cam ealong with my family,stillcoughing,andwheezing,andasuseless--as weaponless--astherestofus. Wecouldhavebeenkilled, rushing in that way. Instead, we were lucky. Wescaredawayourthieves.

Along with ourstore-bought food and the radio, thethievesgotsomeofDad'stoolsandsupplies--nails, wire, scre ws, bolts, that kindof thing. They didn't get the phone, the computer, or anything in Dad's office. In fact, they didn't get into Dad's office at all. I suppose we scared them away before they could search thewholehouse.

TheystoleclothingandshoesfromCory'sroom,butdidn't touch my roomo rthe boys'. They got some of our money-- thekitchen money, Cory calls it. She had hidden it in the kitchen in a box of detergent. She had thoughtnoonewouldsteal such at hing. In fact, the thie vesmight have stolen it for resale without realizing that it was n't just detergent. It could have bee nworse. The kitchen money was only about a thousand dollars forminor emergencies. The thieves did not find the rest of our money, some of it hidden out by our lemontree, and some hidden withourtworemaininggunsunderthefloorinCory'sclo set. Dad had gone to a lot of trouble to make a kind of floorsafe, not locked, but completely concealed beneath arugand a battered chest of drawersfilledwithsewingthings--salvagedbitsofcloth, button s, zippers, hooks, thingslike that. Thechestof drawerscouldbemovedwithonehand. Itslid fromone side of the closet to the other if youpusheditright, and in secondsyoucouldhavethemoney and theguns in your hands. The concealment trick wouldn't have defeate dpeople who had time to make a thorough search, but it had defeated our thieves. They had dumped some of the drawers onto the floor, but they had not thought tolookunderthechest.

ThethievesdidtakeCory'ssewingmachine.Itwas acompact, sturdyoldmachinewithitsowncarryingcase. Both case and machin ewere gone. That was a real blow. Cory and I both use that machine to make, alter, and repairclothingfor the family. I had thought I might even be able to earnsomemoneywiththemachine, sewingforotherpeopleinthe neighborhood.Nowthemachineisgone.Sewingforthe family will have to be done by hand. It will take muchm ore time, andmay not look like what we're used to. Bad. Hard. But not a fatal blow. Corycried over the loss of hermachine, but wecanget along without it. She's just being worn down by one blowafteranother.

We'lladapt. We'llhaveto. Godis Change. Strangeh ow much it helpsme to rememberthat.

CurtisTalcott justcame to my window to tell me that thefiremenhavefoundcharredbodiesandbonesin theashesofthePayne-Parrishhouse. Thepolice arehere, taki ngreportsoftherobberiesandtheobviousarson. I told Cory. She can tell Wardell Parrisho rlet the copstell him. He'slying down on one of our living roomcouches. I doubt that he's sleeping. Even though I've never likedhim, I feelsorryforhim. He'slosthishomeandhisfamily. He'sthe only survivor. What must that be like? TUESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 2026

Idon'tknowhowlongitcanlast,butinsomewaythat I suspect is not quite legal, Cory has taken over part of the job Dad held for so long. She'll give theclassesDadgave.Withthecomputerhookupswe havealreadyin place,she'llissueassignments, receivehomework,andbeavailableforphoneandcompu-conferences. The ad ministrative part ofDad'sworkwillbehandledbysomeoneelsewho canusetheextramoney,andwhoiswillingtos howup at the colleg emore often than onceortwice amonth.ItwillbeasthoughDadwerestillteaching, buthadd ecidedtogiveuphisotherresponsibilities. Coryhasarrangedthisbypleadingandbegging,bycryingand cajolingand calling in every favor and everyfriendshecouldthinkof.Peopleatthecollegekno wher. She taught there before Bennett's birth,before shesawtheneedhereandbeganthe front-roomschool that servesall the children of theneighborhood. Dadwasallforherquittingthe collegebecau sehedidn'twanthergoingbackandforth outsid e, exposed to all the dangers that involved. The neighborspay a per-kidfee, but it isn'tmuch. Noonecould support a household on it.

Now Cory will have to go outside again. She'salreadydraftingmenandolderboysinthe neighborhoodtoe scortherwhenshehastogoout. Thereareplentyofunemployedmenhere, and Cory will be paying them as mallfee.

Soinafewdays,thenewtermwillstartandCorywill do Dad's work- -while I do her work. I'll handlethe schoolwithhelpfromherandfromRusselDory, JoanneandHarry'sgrandfather. Heusedtobea highschoolmathte acher. He'sbeenretiredforyears, but he' sstill sharp. I don't think I need his help, but Cory does, and he's willing, so that'sthat. Alex Montoya and Kayla Talcott will take overDad'spreachingandotherchurchwork. Neitherisordained, but bothh ave substituted forDad in the past. Both have authority in the community and the church. And, of course, bothknowtheir Bible.

Thisishowwewillsurviveandholdtogether.Itwillwork. I don't know how lon git will last, but for now, itwill work.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 30,

2026

Wardell Parrish has finally dragged himself back to his people-- to the part of his family that he lived with beforeheandhissisterinheritedtheSimshouse. He'sstayedwithussincehissisterandallherchildre nwere killed. Cory gave himsomeof Dad'sclotheswhichweretoobigforhim.Muchtoobig.

He wandered around, not talking, not seeming to seeanything, not eating enough. . . . Then yesterday he said, like a little boy, "I want to go home. I can't stay here. I hate it here; everyone's dead! I have togohome."

So today Wyatt Talcott, Michael, and Curtis escortedhimhome.Poorman.He'syearsolderthanhewas a weekago. I think hemay not live much longer.

2027

We are Earthseed. We are flesh-- self-aware, questing, problem-solving flesh. We are that aspect of Earthlife best able to shape God knowingly. We are Earthlife maturing, Earthlife preparing to fall awayfrom the parent world. We are Earthlife preparing to take root in new ground, Earthlife fulfilling its purpose, its promise, its Destiny. EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

by LaurenOya Olamina

14

In order to riseFromitsownashesA phoenix

First Must Burn.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVINGSATURDAY, JULY 31, 2027-- MORNING

Last night, when I escaped from then eighborhood, it was burning. The houses, the trees, the people: Burning.

Smokeawoke me, and I shouteddown the hall toCoryandtheboys.Igrabbedmyclothesand emergency packandfollowedCoryassheherded theboysout.

Thebellneverrang. Our watchers must have been killed before they could reach it.

Everythingwaschaos. Peoplerunning, screaming, shooting. Thegatehadbeendestroyed. Our attackershadd rivenanancienttruckthroughit. They must hav estolen a truck just to crash itthroughourgate.

Ithinktheymusthavebeenpyroaddicts--bald peoplewithpaintedheads, faces, and hands. Red faces; bluefaces; greenfaces; screamingmouths; avid, cra zy eyes, glittering in the firelight.

They shotusandshotus. I saw NatalieMoss,running,screaming,thenpitchingbackward,her face half gone, her body still impelled forward. She fell flat on her back, and did not move again.

I fell with her, caught up in herdeath. I lay there, dazed, struggling to move, to get up. Cory and the boys, runningahead of menever noticed. They ranon.

I got up, feltfor my pack, found it, and ran. I tried nottoseewhatwashappeningaroundme. Hearingthe gunfireandthescreamsdidn't stopme. Adead body-- Edwin Dunn--didn't stopme. I bent, snatcheduphisgun,andkeptrunning.

Someonescreamednearme, then tackled me, pulled med own. I fired the gun in reflexive terror, and took the terrible impact in my own stomach. A green facehung above mine, mouthopen, eyes wide, not yet feeling all hispain. I shot him again,terrifiedthathispainwouldimmobilizemewhenhedid feel it. It seemed that he too ka longtime to die.

WhenI could moveagain, I pushed his body off me. I got up, still holding the gun, and ran for thewrec kedgate.

Best to be in the darkness outside. Best to hide. I ran up Meredith Streetaway from Durant Road, awayfromthefiresandtheshooting. Ihadlosttrackof Cory and theb oys. I thought they wouldgo toward the hills and not toward thecenter of town. Every direction was dangerous, but the rewasmore danger where the reweremore people. In the night, a woman and three kids might look like a gift basket of food, money, and sex.

North toward the hills. North through the dark streets to where the nearby hills and mountains blotted outthestars.

Andthenwhat?

I didn't know. I couldn't think. I hadnever beenoutsidethewallswhenitwassodark. Myonlyhopeof staying alive was to listen, hear any movement beforeitgottooclosetome, seewhat I could by starlight, beasquietas I could.

Iwalkeddownthemiddleofthestreetlookingand listeningandtryingtoavoidpotholesandchunksof brokenasphalt. There was little other trash. Anything that would burn, people woulduseasfuel. Anything that couldbereusedorsoldhadbeengathered. Coryu sed to comment on that. Poverty, she said, hadmadethe streetscleaner.

Wherewasshe? Wherehadshetaken mybrothers? Were they all right? Had they even gotten out of the neighborhood?

I stopped. Were my brothers back there? WasCurtis?Ihadn'tseenhimatall--thoughifanyonewere goin gto survive this insanity, it would be the Talcotts. But wehad no way of finding each other. Sound. Footsteps. Two pairs of runningfootsteps. I stayed where I was, frozen in place. No sudden moves to draw attention to me. Had I already beenseen?CouldIbeseen--afigureofdarkerdarknessin an otherwise empty street?

Thesoundwasbehindme. Ilistened and knew that it was off to one side, approaching, passing. Two peoplerunning down as idestreet, in different to the noise they made, in different to woman - shaped shadows.

Iletoutabreathanddrewanotherthroughmy mouthbecauseIcouldgetmoreairwithlesssoundthat way. I couldn't go back to the fires and the pain. If Cory and the boy swere there, they weredeador worse, captive. But they had been ahead of me. They must have gottenout. Cory wouldn't let them come backto lookfor me. There wasa bright glow intheairoverwhathadbeenourneighborhood. Ifshe had gottentheboysaway, allshehadtodowas lookback to knowthat she didn't want to go back. Didshehaveher Smith & Wesson? I wished I had it and the two boxe sof ammunition that went with it. All I had was the knife in my pack and Edwin Dunn's old .45 automatic. And all the ammunition I had for it was in it. If it wasn't empty. I knew the gun. It held seven rounds. I'd fired it twice. How many times had Edwin Dunnfired it before some one shothim? I didn't expect to find out until morning. I had a flash light in my pack, but I didn't intend tou se it unless I could be certain I wouldn't be making a target of myself.

Duringthedaythesightofthebulgeinmypocket wouldbeenoughtomakepeoplethinktwiceabout robbingorrapi ngme.Butduringthenightthebluegun would be allb ut invisible even in my hand. If it were empty, I could only use itasa club. And the moment I hitsomeone with it, I might aswell hitmyself. Ifflostconsciousnessfor anyreasonduringa fight, I would lose all my possession sif not my life. Tonight I had to hide.

Tomorrow I would have to try to bluff asmuchas possible. Most people wouldn't insist on my shooting themjusttotestwhetherornotthegunwasloaded. Forthestreetpoor,unabletoaffordmedicalcare, even a minor wound might be fatal.

Iamoneofthestreetpoor,now.Notaspoorassome, but homeless, alone, full of books and ignorant of reality. Unless I meet someone from the neighborhood, the re's no one I can afford to trust.Noonetoback meup.

Three miles to the hills. I kept to the starlit backstreets listening and looking around. The gunwas in my hand.

I meant to keep it there. I could hear dogs barkingandsnarling, fightingsomewherenotfar away.

I was in a cold sweat. I had neverbeen more terrified in my life. Yet nothing attacked me. Nothingfound me.

I didn't go all the way to the hills. Instead I found aburnedout,unwalledhouseafewblocksbeforetheend of Meredith Street. Fear of dogshad mad eme keepan eye open for anything that mightprovideshelter.

Thehousewasaruin,aplunderedruin.Itwasn'tsafe to wal kinto withorwithout a light. It was aroofless collectionofuprightblackbones.Butithadbeen built up off the ground. Five con cretesteps led up to what hadbeen the front porch. Thereshouldbeawayunderthehouse.

Whatifotherpeoplewereunderit?

I walkedaround it, listening, trying to see. Then, instead of daring to crawl under, I settled in what was left of the attached garage. A corner of it wasstillstanding, and there was enough rubble infront of that corne r to conceal me if I didn't show a light. Also, if I were surprised, I could get out of the garage faster than I could dcrawlout from under a house. The concrete floor could not collapse under me as the wooden floor might in what was left of the house proper. It was a so good as I was going to get, and I was exhausted. I didn't know whether I could sleep, but I had to rest.

Morning now. What shall I do? I did sleep a little, but I kept startlingawake. Every sound woke me-- th ewind,rats,insects,thensquirrels,andbirds....Idon't feel rested, but I'm a little less exhauste d. So what shall I do?

Howisithatwehadneverestablishedanoutside meetingplace--somewherewherethefamilycouldreunite after disaste r. I remembersuggesting to Dad that we do that, but he had neverdone anything about it, and I hadn't pushed the ideaasI should have. (PoorGodshaping. Lack of forethought.)

What now?

Now, I have to go home. I don't want to. The idea scaresme to death. It's taken me a longtime just to write the word: Home. But I have to knowabout mybrothers, and about Coryand Curtis. Idon't know howIcanhelpifthey'rehurtorbeingheldbysomeone. I don't kno wwhat might bewaiting formebackattheneig hborhood.Morepaintedfaces?Thepolice? I'm in trouble either way. If the police are there, I'll have to hide my gun befo re I go in-- my gun, and my smallamount of money. Carrying a gun canwin you a lot of unwa nted attention from the police if you catch them in thewrong mood. Yeteveryonewhohasonecarriesit.The trick,of course, is not to get caught carrying it.

Ontheotherhand, if the painted faces are still there, I can't goin at all. How long do those people stay high on pyro and fire? Do they hang around after their fun to steal whatever's left and may be kill a few more people?

No matter. I have to go and see. I have to go home.

SATURDAY, JULY 31, 2027

--EVENING

I have to write. I don't knowwhat else to do. The others are asleep now, but it isn't dark. I'm on watch because I couldn't sleep if I tried. I'm jittery and crazed. I can't cry. I want to get up and just runand run. . . , Run away from everything. But thereisn't any away.

I have to write. There's nothing familiar left to me but the writing. God is Change. I hate God. I have towrite.

Therewerenounburnedhousesbackinthe neighborhood, although somewere burnedworse than others. Idon't know whether police or firefighters ever came. If they had come, they were gone when I got there. The neighborhood was wide open and crawling with scaven gers.

Istoodatthegate, staringinasstrangerspicked among the blackbones of our homes. Theruins were still smoking, but men, women, and children were all over them, digging through them, picking fruitfrom the trees, stripping our dead, quarrelingor fighting overnew acquisitions, stashing things away inclothing or bundles.... Who were the esepeople? I put my hand on the gun in my pocket—it had four rounds left in it-- and I went in. I was grimy from lying in dirt andashes all night. I might not be noticed.

IsawthreewomenfromanunwalledpartofDurant Road, diggingthroughwhatwasleftoftheYannis house. They were laughing and throwing around chunksofwood and plaster.

WherewereShaniYannisandherdaughters? Wherewerehersisters?

Iwalkedthroughtheneighborhood,lookingpastthe humanmaggots,tryingtofindsomeofthepeopleI hadgrown upwith.Ifounddeadones.EdwinDunn laywherehehadwhenItookhisgun,butnowhe wasshirtlessandshoeless. Hispocketshadbeenturnedo ut.

The groundwas littered with ash-covered corpses, some burned or half blown apart by automatic weapons fire. Dried or nearly dried blood had pooled in the street. Two men were prying loose our emergency bell. The bright, clear, early morning sunlight made the wholesceneless real somehow, more night mare like. I stopped in front of our house and stared at the five adults and the child who were picking through the ruins of it. Who we rethese vultures? Did the fired raw them? Is that what the street poor do? Runto fire and hope to find a corpse to strip?

Therewasadeadgreenfaceonourfrontporch. I wentupthestepsandstoodlookingathim--ather. The greenface wasawoman--tall, lean, bald, but female. And what had she died for? What was the point of all this?

"Leaveheralone" Awomanwhohadapairof Cory's shoes inherhands trode uptome. "Shedied for allofus. Leave heralone."

I've never in my life wanted more to kill another humanbeing. "Get the hell out of my way," I said. I didn't raise my voice. I don't knowhow I looked, but the thief backedaway.

I stepped over the green face andwent into the carcassofour home. The other thie veslooked at me, but none of them saidanything. One pair, Inoticed, wasamanwithasmallboy. Themanwas dressingthe boyinapairofmybrother Gregory's jeans. The jeans were much too big, but theman belted themandrolled themup.

AndwherewasGregory,myclownishsmartassofa babybrother?Wherewashe?Wherewas everyone?

Theroofofourhousehadfallenin. Mostthingshadburned-- kit chen, living room, diningroom, my room.

... The floor wasn'tsafe to walkon. Isaw one of the scavengers fall through, give a surprised yell, then climb, unhurt, onto a floor joist.

Nothing left in my roomcouldbesalvaged. Ashes. A heat-distorted metal bedframe, thebroken metaland ceramicremainsofmylamp, bunchesofashesthat hadbeenclothingorbooks. Manybookswerenotburned thro ugh. They were useless, but they had been packed so tightly together that the fireh adburnedindeeplyfrom theedgesandthespines. Roughcirclesofunburnedpaperremained, surroundedbyash. Ididn'tfindasinglewhole page. Thebacktwobedroomshadsurvivedbetter. That waswherethescavengerswere, and where I headed.

I found bundledpairs of my father'ssocks, folded shorts and T-shirts, and an extra holsterthat I could use for the .45. All this I found in orunder the unpromising-lookingremainsofDad'schestofdra wers. Most thingswere burnedbeyonduse, but I stuffed the best of what I found into my pack. The man with the child came over to scavengebesideme,andso mehow,perhapsbecauseofthechild, becausethisstrangerinhisfilthyragswassomeone's fathe r, too, I didn't mind. The little boywatchedthetwoofus,hissmallbrownface expressionless. HedidlookalittlelikeGregory.

I dug a driedapricot out of my pack and held it out to him. He couldn't havebeen more thansix, but he wouldn't touch the food until the man told him to. Good discipline. But at the man'snod, he snatched the apricot, bit off a tiny taste, then stuffed the restintohismouthwhole.

So, in company with five strangers, I plundered my family's home. The ammunition under the closet floor in my parents' room had burned, had no doubt exploded. The closet was badly charred. So much for the moneyhidden there.

I took dental floss, soap, and a jar of petroleum jelly from my parents' bathroom. Everything elsewasalre adygone.

Imanagedtogatheronesetofouterclothingeach for Coryandmybrothers. In particular, I found shoes for them. There was a woman scavenging among Marcus's shoes, and she glared at me, but she kept quiet. My brothers had runo ut of the house in their pajamas. Cory had thrownona coat. I had been the last to get out of the housebecause I had risked stoppingtograbjeans, asweatshirt, and shoes as well a smy emergency pack. I could have been killed. If I had thought about what I was doing, if I hadhadtothink,nodoubtIwouldhavebeenkilled.Irea cted the way I had trained myself to react--thoughmy trainingwasfarfromuptodate--morememory than nything else. I hadn't practiced late at night for ages, Yet my self-administered traininghadworked.

Now, if I could get the sec lothest of Coryand my brothers, I might be able to make up for their lack of training.

Especially if I could get the money under the rocks by the lemon tree.

Iputclothesandshoesintoasalvagedpillowcase, lookedaroundforblankets,andcouldn'tfindaone. They must have beeng rabbed early. All the more reason to get the lemon-tree money.

I went out to the peach tree, and, being tall,managedtoreachacoupleofnearly-ripepeachesthat other scavengers had missed. Then I looked aroundasthoughforsomethingmoretotake,andsurprised myself by almost crying at the sig ht ofCory'sbig,well-tendedbackgarden,trampledintothe ground. Peppers, tomatoes, squashes, carrots, cucumbers, lettuce, melons, sunflowers, beans, corn. . . . Much of it wasn't ripe yet, but what hadn't beenstolenhadbeendestroyed.

Iscavengedafewcarrots, acouple of handfuls of sunflowerseeds from flower heads that layon the ground, and afe whean pods from vines Coryhad planted to run up the sunflower stalks and complants. I took what was left the way I thought a late-arrivingscavenger would. And I workedmy way toward the lemon tree. When I reached it, heavy with little green lemons, I hunted forany with even a hint of paling, of yellow. I took a few from the tree, andfromtheground. Coryhadplantedshade-lovingflowers at the base of the tree, and they had thrived there. She and my father had scattered small, roundedbouldersamongtheseinawaythat seemed no more thandecorative. A few of thesehadbeenturnedover, crushing the flowers near them. In fact, the roc kwith the money under it had been turned over. But not the two or three inches of dirt over the money packet, triple wrapped and heat-sealedinplastic.

I snatched the packet in no more time than it hadtakentopickupacoupleoflemonsamomentbefore. First I spotted the hiding place, then Isnatchedupthemoneypacketalongwithahandfullof dirt. Then, eager to leave, but terrified of drawing attention to myself, I pickedupa few more lemons and huntedaround for more food.

The figs were hard andgreen instead of purple, and the persimmonswere yellow-green instead of orange. I found a single ear of corn left on a downed stalka ndused it to stuff the money packet deeper into my blanket pack. Then I left.

With my pack on my back and the pillow case in my left arm, restingonmy hip like a baby, I walked down the driveway to the street. I kept my right hand free for the gun still in my pocket. I had not taken time to put on the holster.

Thereweremorepeoplewithinthewallsthantherehad been whe nI arrived. I had to walkpast most ofthemto getout. Otherswere leaving with their loads, and I tried to follow them without quite attaching myself to any particul argroup. This meant that I moved more slowly than I would have chosen to. I had time to look at the corps es and see what I didn't want to see.

Richard Moss, starknaked, lying in a pool of hisownblood. Hishouse, closertothegate than ours, had been burned to the ground. Only the chimney stuck upblackened and naked from the rubble. Where were histwosu rviving wives Karenand Zahra? Or had they survived? Where were all his many children?

Little Robin Balter, naked, filthy, bloody between her legs, cold, bony, barely pubescent. Yet she might have married my brother Marcussomeday. Shemighthavebeenmysister. Sheandalwaysbeen suchabright, sharp, greatlittlekid, allserious and kno wing. Twelve going on thirty-five, Coryused to say. She always miled when she said it.

RussellDory,Robin'sgrandfather.Onlyhisshoes hadbeentaken.Hisbodyhadbeenalmosttornapart by automati cweapons fire. An old man and a child. What had the painted facesgotten for all theirkilling?

"Shediedforus,"thescavengerwomanhadsaidof thegreenface. Somekindofinsaneburn-the-rich movement, Keithhadsaid. We'veneverbeenrich, but to the de sperate, we looked rich. We weresurvivingandwehadour wall. Didourcommunity diesothataddictscouldmakeahelp-the-poorpolitical statement?

Therewereothercorpses.Ididn'tgetacloselookatmost of them. They littered the front yards, the street, and theisland. Therewasnosignofour emergencybellnow. Themenwhohadwantedit hadcarrieditaway--perhapstobesoldforitsmetal. I saw Layla Yan nis, Shani'soldest daughter. LikeRobin, shehadbeenraped. IsawMichaelTalcott, onesideofhisheadsmashedin. Ididn'tlookaroundfor Curtis. I was terrified that I might see him lying nearby. I was almost out of control as it was, and I couldn't dra w attention to myself. I couldn't beanythingmorethananotherscavengerhaulingawaytreasure.

Bodiespassedunder my eyes; Jeremy Balter, one of Robin's brothers, Philip Moss, George Hsu, hiswife andhisoldestson, Juana Montoya, Rubin Quintanilla, Lidia Cruz. . . . Lidia was only eight yearsold. Shehadbe enraped, too.

I made it back through the gate. I didn't breakdown.Ihadn'tseenCoryormybrothersinthecarnage.That didn't mea nthey weren't there, but I hadn't seenthem. They might be alive. Curtis might bealive.Whereco uldIlookforthem?

The Talcotts had relatives living in Robledo, but Ididn'tknowwhere. SomewhereontheothersideofRiver Street. I couldn't look for them, thoug hCurtis might have gone to them. Why hadn't anyone else stayed to salvage what they could?

Icircledtheneighborhood, keepingthewallinsight, thenmadeagreatercircle. Isawnoone--oratleast nooneIkn ew. Isawotherstreetpoorwhostaredat me.

Then because I didn't knowwhat else to do, IheadedbacktowardmyburnedoutgarageonMeredith Street. I couldn't call the police. All the phonesIknewofwereslag.Nostrangerswouldlet meusetheirphoneiftheyhad phones,andIdidn'tkno wanyone whom I couldpay to call and trust tomakethecall.Mostpeoplewouldavoid meorbetempted to kee pmy money and nevercall. And anyway, if the police have ignored what'sbeend one to my neighborhood so far, if such a fire and somanycorpsescanbeignored, whyshould Igotothem? What would they do? Arrest me? Take mycashastheirfee? Iwouldn't besurprised. Besttostay clear of them.

Butwher ewasmy family!Someonecalledmyname.

I turned around, my hand in my pocket, and sawZahraMossandHarryBalter--RichardMoss's youngest wifeandRobinBalter'soldestbrother. They were an unli kely pair, but they weredefinitely together. They managed, without touchingeach other, to give the appearance of all but clinging together. Both were bloo d-spattered and ragged. IlookedatHarry'sbatteredswollenfaceand rememberedthatJoannehadlovedhim-- orthought shehad--andthathewouldn'tmarryherandgowith hertoOlivarbecausehebelievedwhatDadbelieved about Olivar.

"Areyouallright?"heaskedme.

Inodded,rememberingRobin.Didheknow?RussellDory, Robin, an dJeremy. ... "They beat you up?" I asked, feelingstupidand awkward. I didn't want totellhimhisgrandfather,brother,andsisterwere dead.

"I had to fight my way out last night. I was lucky they didn't shoot me." He swayed, lookedaround. "Let' ssitonthecurb."

BothZahraandIlookedaround,madesurenoone elsewasnearby. WesatwithHarrybetweenus. Isat on my pillowcase of clothing. Zahra and Harry were fully dressed, in spite of their coating of blo od and dirt, but they carriednothing. Did they have nothing, orhad they left their thingssomewhere-- perhaps with whateve rwas left of their families. AndwherewasZahra'slittlegirlBibi?Didsheknowthat RichardMosswasdead?

"Everyone'sdead," Zahrawhisperedasthoughspe akinginto my thoughts. "Everyone. Those painted bastard skilled themall!"

"No!"Harryshookhishead."Wegotout.There'llbe some others." He sat with hisfacein hishands, and Iwond eredwhetherhewasmorehurtthanIhad thought.Iwasn'tsharinganyseriouspainwithhim.

"Have either of you seen my brothersorCory?" I asked.

"Dead," Zahra whispered. "Like my Bibi. All dead." I jumped. "No! Not all of them. No! Did yousee them?"

"I saw most of the Montoya family," Harry said. Hewasn'ttalkingtomeasmuchasmusingaloud."We saw themlastnight. Theysaid Juanawas dead. Therest of them weregoing to walk to Glendalewhere their relatives live."

"But--" I began.

"AndIsawLaticiaHsu.Shehadbeenstabbed40or

50times."

"But did you see my brothers?" I had to ask.

"They're all dead, I told you," Zahra said. "They got out, but the paints caught themand dragged them back and killed them. I saw. One of them had me down, and he. . ..I saw."

Shewasbeingrapedwhenshesawmyfamily draggedbackandkilled? Wasthatwhatshemeant? Wa sit true?

"I went back this morning," I said. "I didn't see their bodies. Didn't seeany of them." Oh, no. Oh, no. Oh, no. ...

"Isaw. Your mother. All of them. Isaw." Zahra hugged herself. "I didn't want to see, but I saw."

We all sat without talking. I don't knowhowlongwesatthere. Nowandthen someonewalked pastus and look ed atus, somedirty, ragged person with bundles. Cleaner people in little bunches rode past us on bikes. A group of three rode past on motorcycles, their electric humand whine strange in the quiet street.

WhenI got up, the other two lookedat me. For no reason except habit, I picked up my pillowcase. I don't knowwhat I meant to do with the thingsin it. It hadoccurred to me, though, that I should get backto mygaragebeforesomeoneelsesettledthere.I wasn'tthinkingverywell.Itwasasthoughthat garagewashomeno w,andallIwantedintheworld wastobethere.

Harry got up and almost fell down again. Hebent and threw up into thegutter. The sight of his throwing up grabbed at me, and I only just managed to lookaway in time to avoid joining him. He finished, spat, turned to face Zahra and me, and coughed.

"I feel like hell," he said.

"They hit him in the head last night," Zahra explained. "Hegot me away from the guy whowas. .

. . Well, you know. Hegot me away, but they hurt him."

"There's aburned outgarage where Isleptlast night, "Isaid." It's along walk, but he can rest there. We can all rest there."

Zahra took my pillowcase and carried it. Maybesomethinginitcoulddohersomegood. Wewalked oneither sideofHarryandkepthimfromstoppingorwandering off or staggering too much. Someh ow, we got him to the garage.

15

KindnesseasesChange.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SUNDAY, AUGUST1, 2027

Harry slept most of the day today. Zahra and I tookturnsstayingwithhim. Hehasaconcussion at least, and heneeds time to heal. Wehaven't talkedaboutwhatwe'lldoifhegetssickerinsteadof healing. Zahra doesn'twanttoabandonhimbecause he fought to save her. I don't want to abandon himb ecause I've know n him all my life. He'sagoodguy. Iwonderifthere's someway to get in touc hwith the Garfields. They would give him ahome, or at least see that he has medical care.

But he doesn't seem to be getting worse. He totters out to the fenced back yard to urinate. Heeats the food anddrinks thewater that I give him. With noneedfordiscussion,we'reeatinganddrinkingspa ringly from my supplies. They're all wehave. Soon we'll have to risk goingout to buy more. But today, Sunday, is a day of rest andhealing for us. ThepainofHarry'sheadacheandhisbruised,beaten body are alm ost welcome to me. They're distractions. Along withZahra's talkingand crying for her dead daughter, they fill my mind.

Their misery easesmy own, somehow. It gives me moments when I don't thinkabout my family. Everyone is dead. But how can they be? Everyone? Zahra hasasoft, little-girl voice that I used to thinkwasphony. It'sreal, but ittakes on a sandpaper roughness when she's upset. It sound spainful, as though it sabrading her throat as she speaks.

Shehadseenherdaughterkilled, seentheblueface who shot Bibi as Zah ra ran, carrying her. She believed the blue facewasen joying himself, sho oting at all the moving targets. She said his expression reminded therofaman having sex.

"I fell down," she whispered. "I thought I was dead. Ithoughthehadkilledme. Therewas blood. Then I saw Bibi'sheaddroptooneside. Aredfacegrabbedh er fromme. I didn't see where he camefrom. Hegrabbedher and threwher into the Hsu house. The house was burning everywhere. He threwher into the fire.

"I went crazy then. I don't knowwhat I did. Somebodygrabbed me, then I was free, then somebody shoved medownand fell on me. I couldn't get my breath, and he tore my clothes. Thenhewasonme, and I couldn't do nothing. That's when Isaw your mother, your brothers. . . .

"ThenHarrywasthere,andhepulledthebastardoffme. He told me later that I was screaming. I don't know whatIwasdoing.Hewasbeatinguptheguyhe'd pulled off me whe na new guy jumpedhim. I hitthenewguy witharockandHarryknockedtheotherone out. The nwe gotaway. We just ran. We didn'tsleep.Hehidbet weentwounwalledhousesdownthe streeta way from the fire until a guy came out with an ax and chasedus away. Then we just wandered until we found you. We didn't even reallyknoweachotherbefore. Youknow. Richardneverwante dus to have much to dowith the neighbors-- especially the white ones."

Inodded,rememberingRichardMoss."He'sdead,you know," Isaid. "Isaw him." I wanted to takethewords backassoonasI'dsaidthem.Ididn'tknow howtotellsomeoneherhusbandwasdead,butthere must be a better, gentler way than that.

She stared at me, stricken. I wanted to apologize for my bluntness, but I didn't think it would help. "I'm sorry," I said in a kind of genericapology for everything. She began to cry, and I repeated, "I'msorry."

I held her and let her cry. Harry woke up,drank a little water, and listened while Zahra toldhow Richard Moss had bought her from her homelessmotherwhenshewasonlyfifteen--youngerthanI hadthought--andb roughthertoliveinthefirsthouse she had eve rknown. He gaveher enough toeatanddidn'tbeather,andeven whenherco-wiveswere hateful to her, it was a thousan dtimes betterthanlivingoutsidewithhermotherand starving. Nowshewasoutsideagain.Insixyears,shehad gonefromnothingtonothing.

"Doyouhavesomeplacetogo?"sheaskedusat last.Doyouknowanybodywhostillhasahouse?"I looked at Ha rry. "You might be able to get into Olivar if you can walk there fromhere. The Garfieldswouldtakeyouin."

He thought about that for a while. "I don't want to," he said. "I don't think there's any more future in Olivarthantherewasinourneighborhood. Butat least in ourneighborhood. Butat least in ourneighborhood."

ghborhood, we had the guns."

"For all the good it did us," Zahra muttered.

"I know. But they wereour guns, not hired gunmen. No one could turn themagainst us. In Olivar, from whatJoannesaid,noone's allowed to have a gunexcept the security force. An dwho the hellare they?"

"Company people," I said. "People from outside Olivar."

Henodded."That's what I heard, too. May be it will be all right, but it doesn't sound all right."

"It soundsbetter thanstarving," Zahra said. "You guys have nevermisseda meal, have you?"

"I'm going north," I said. "I planned to go anywayoncemyfamilywasbackonitsfeet.NowIhavenofamily, and I'm going."

"Northwhere?"Zahrademanded.

I ate four of them. They were delicious, and too ripe to travel well anyway.

"Why don't you try on some of thoseclothes," I said.

"Takewhat fits you."

She fit not only into Marcus's shirt and jeans--though she had toroll the jeans leg sup--but into his shoes. Shoes are expensive. Now she has two pair.

"You let me do it, I'lltrade these little shoes for some food," she said.

I nodded. "Tomorrow. Whatever youget, we'll split it. Then I'm leaving."

"Goingnorth?"

"Yes."

"Justnorth.Doyouknowanythingabouttheroads andtownsandwheretobuystufforstealit?Haveyou got money?"

"I have maps," I said. "They're old, but I think they'restillgood. Noone's been building new roads lately."

"Hell no. Money?"

"A little. Not enough, I suspect."

"No such thing as enough money. What about him?" She gestured toward Harry's unmoving back. He was a support of the property of the property waslyingdown.Icouldn'ttellwhetherhewasasleepor not.

"Hehastodecideforhimself," Isaid. "Maybehe wantstohangaroundtolookforhisfamilybeforehe goes."

He turned overslowly. He lookedsick, but fullyaware. Zahraputthepeachesshehadsavedforhim next to him.

"I don't want to wait for anything," he said. "I wish we could start now. I hate this place."

"Yougoingwithher?"Zahraasked,jabbingathumbat me.

Helookedatme."Wemightbeabletohelpeachother," he said. "At least we knowe ach other, and. .

.I managed to grab a few hundred dollars as I ran out of the house." He was offeringtrust. He meantwecouldtrusteachother. Thatwasnosmallthing.

"I was thinking of travelingasa man," I said to him. He seemed to be repressing a smile. "That will be safer for you. You're at least tall enough to fool people. You'llhave to cut your hair, though."

Zahragrunted."Mixedcouplescatchhellwhetherpeople think they're gay or straight. Harry'll piss off allthe blacksandyou'llpissoffallthewhites.Goodluck."

I watched herasshe said it, and realized what she wasn't saying. "You want to come?" I asked.

She sniffed. "Why should I? I won't cut my hair!"

"Noneed,"Isaid."Wecanbeablackcoupleand theirwhitefriend.IfHarrycangetareasonabletan, maybewecan claimhimasacousin."

She hesitated, then whispered, "Yeah, I want to go." And she started to cry. Harry stared atherin surprise.

"Did you thinkwe weregoing to just dump you?" I asked,"Allyouhadtodowasletusknow."

"I don't have any money," she said. "Not a dollar."

I sighed. "Where did you get those peaches."

"You were right. I stole them."

"Youhaveausefulskill,then,andinformationaboutliving out here." I faced Harry. "What do you think?"

"Herstealingdoesn'tbotheryou?"heasked

"I mean to survive," I said.

"Thoushalt not steal," he quoted. "Yearsandyears--alifetimeof Thoushaltnotsteal."

IhadtosmotheraflashofangerbeforeIcould answer.Hewasn'tmyfather.Hehadnobusinessquotin gscripture at me. He was nobody. I didn't look at him. I didn't speak until I knew my voicewould sound normal. Then, "I said I mean to survive," I told him. "Don't you?"

He nodded. "It wasn't a criticism. I'm just surprised."

"I hope it won't ever meangetting caught or leaving someone else to starve," I said. And to my own surpr ise, I smiled. "I've thought about it. That's the way I feel, but I've never stolen anything."

"You'rekidding!"Zahrasaid.

I shrugged. "It's true. I grewup trying to set a good example for my brothers and tryingto live up to my father's expectations. That seemed like what Ishouldbedoing."

"Oldest kid," Harry said. "I know." He was the oldest in his family.

"Oldest, hell," Zahra said, laughing. "You'reboth babiesout here."

Andthatwasn'toffensive, somehow. Perhaps because it was true. "I'm inexperienced," I admitted.

"But I can learn. You're goingto be one of my teachers."

"One?" she said. "Whohave you got but me?"

"Everyone."

She looked scornful. "No one."

"Everyonewho'ssurvivingouthereknowsthingsthat I need to kno w," I said. "I'll watch them, I'll listen to them, I'll learn from them. If I don't, I'llbe killed. And like I said, I intend to survive."

"They'll sell you a bowl of shit," shesaid.

I nodded. "I know. But I'll buy as few of thoseas possible."

She looked at me for a longtime, then sighed. "IwishI'dknownyoubetterbeforeallthishappened," shesaid. "You'reaweirdpreacher'skid.Ifyoustillwant to play man, I'll cut your hair for you."

I took my many purchasesout to what was once the groundfloor of a parking structure, and was nowakind of semi-encl osed flea market. Many of the thingsdug out of ashheaps and landfills windup for salehere. The rule is that if you buy something in the store, you can sell something of similar value in the structure. Your rece ipt, codedanddated, isyour peddler's license.

The structure waspatrolled, though more to check these licenses than to keep anyone safe. Still, thestru cturewassaferthanthestreet.

IfoundHarryandZahrasittingonourbundles,Harry waiting to go into the store, and Zahra waiting for herlicense. Theyhadputtheirbacksagainstawallofthe store at a spot away from the street anda way from the biggest crowd of buyers and sellers. I gaveZahra thereceiptandbegantoseparateandpack ournewsupplies. WewouldleaveassoonasZahra and Harryfinished theirbuyingandselling.

Wewalkeddowntothefreeway--the 118--and turnedwest. Wewouldtake the 118 to the 23 and the 23 to U.S. 101. The 101 would take u sup the coast toward Oregon. We became part of abroad river of people walking we stonthefreeway. Only a few stragglede as tagainst the current--east toward the mountains and the desert. Where were the westward walkers going? To something, or just away from here?

Wesawafewtrucks--mostofthemrunatnight-- swarmsofbikesorelectriccycles,andtwocars. Allthesehad plenty of room to speed along theo uterlanespastus. We'resaferifwekeeptotheleftlanesaway from the ona nd off ramps. It's again st the law in California to walk on the freeways, but the law isarchaic. Everyone whowalkswalksonthefreewayssoonero rlater. Freeways provide the most directroutesbetweencitiesandp artsofcities. Dadwalkedor bicycled on them often. Some pro stitutesand peddlers of food, water, and othernecessities livealongthefreewaysinshedsorshacksorintheopen air. Beggars, thieves, and murderers live here, too. But I've never walked a freeway before today. I foundtheexperiencebothfascinatingandfrightenin g. In some ways, the scene remindedme of an old film I saw once of a street in mid-twentieth-centuryChina--walkers,bicyclers, peoplecarrying,pulling,pushingloadsofallkinds. Butthe freewaycrowdisaheterogeneousmass--black an dwhite, Asian and Latin, whole families areonthemove withbabiesonbacksorperchedatop loadsincarts,wagonsorbicyclebaskets, sometimes along with an old or handic apped person. Other old, ill, or handic apped people hobbled along as best they could with the help of sticks or fitter companions. Many were armed with sheathed knives, rifles, and, of course, visible, holstered handguns. The occasional passing coppaid no attention.

Childrencried, played, squatted, dideverything excepteat. Almostnooneatewhile walking. Isawa couple of peopledrink from canteens. They took quick, furtive gulp s, as though they were doing something shameful-or rsomething dangerous.

A woman alongsideuscollapsed. I got no impression of pain from her, except at the suddenimpactofher bodyweightonherknees. Thatmade mestumble, butnotfall. Thewomansatwhereshe hadfallenforafewseconds, then lurched to her feet andbeganwalkingagain,leaningforwardunderher hugepack.

Almosteveryonewasfilthy. Theirbagsandbundlesand packs were filthy. They stank. And we, who have sleptonconcreteinashesanddirt, and who have not bathed for three days-- we fitted in pretty well. Only our new sleepsack packs gaveus away as either new to the road or at least in possession of new stealables. We should have dirtied the packs a little before we got started. We will dirty them tonight. I'llsee to it.

Therewereafewyoungguysaround,leanandquick, som efilthy, some not dirty at all. Keiths. Today's Keiths. Theones who bothered memost weren't carrying much. Some weren't carrying anything except weapons.

Predators. They lookedaround a lot, stared at people, and the people lookedaway. I lookedaway.

IwasgladtoseethatHarryandZahradidthesame.We didn't need trouble. If troubl ecame, I hoped wecould killitandkeepwalking.

Thegunwasfullyloadednow, and Iworeitholste red, but half covered by my shirt. Harry bought himself a knife. The money he had snatchedupasheranfromhisburninghousehadnotbeenenoughto buy a gun. I could have bought a second gun, but it would have taken too much of my money, and we have a long way to go.

Zahra used the shoe money to buy herself a knife and a few personal things. I had refused my share of thatmoney. Sheneeded a few dollars inher pocket.

16

Earthseed

CastonnewgroundMu st first perceiveThatitknowsnothing.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

MONDAY, AUGUST 2, 2027

(cont. from notes expanded

AUGUST 8)

Here are someof the things I've learned today: Walkinghurts. I'veneverdoneenoughwalkingtolearn that bef o re, but I know it now. It isn't only the blisters and sorefeet, although we've got those. After a while, everythingh urts. I think my back and shoulders would like to desert to another body. Nothing eases the painex ceptrest. Even though we got a late start, we stopped twice today to rest. We went off the free way, into hills or bushes to sit down, drink water, eat dried fruit and nuts. Then we went on. The days are longth is time of year.

Suckingonaplumorapricotpitalldaymakesyoufeel less thirsty. Zahra told us that.

"WhenIwasakid,"shesaid,"thereweretimes when I would put a little rock in my mouth. Anything to feel better. It's a cheat, though. If you don't drink enough water, you'll die no matter how you feel."

Allthreeofuswalkedalongwithseedsinourmouths after our first stop, an dwe felt better. Wedrankonly duringourstopsinthehills.It'ssaferthat way.

Also,coldcampsaresaferthancheerycampfires. Yet tonight we cle ared some ground, duginto ahillside,and madeasmallfireinthehollow. Therewe coo ked some of my acorn meal with nuts and fruit. It was wond erful. Soonwe'll run out of it andwe'llhavetosurviveonbeans,commeal,oats--expensive stuff from stores. Aco rnsare home-food,andhomeisgone.

Fires are illegal. You can see them flickering all over the hills, but they are illegal. Everythingisso so dry thatthere'salwaysadangerofcampfiresgettingaway frompeopleand taking out a community or two. It does happen. But peopl ewhohave no homeswillbuildfires. Evenpeoplelikeuswhoknowwhatfire can do will build them. They give comfort, hot food, and a falsesense of security.

Whilewewereeating, and even afterwe'd finished, peopled rifted over and tried to joinus. Most were harmless and easily gotten ridof. Three claimed they just wanted to get warm. The sun was still up, redon the horizon, and it was far from cold.

Threewomenwantedtoknowwhethertwostudslike Harry and me didn't need more thano newoman. Thew omenwhoaskedthismayhavebeen cold, consideringhowfewclothestheyhadon. It's goingtobestrangeforme, pretendingtobeaman.

"Couldn't I just roast this potato in yourcoals?" andoldmanasked, showing usawither edpotato.

We gave him some fire andsent himaway-- andwatchedtoseewherehewent, since aburning brandcouldbe either aweaponor amajor distraction if he had friendshiding. It is crazyto live this way, suspecting helples sold people. In sane. But we need our paranoiatokeepus alive. Hell, Harry wanted to let the old guy sit with us. It took Zahra and me tog ether to let him know that wasn't going to happen. Harry and I have been well-fedandprotectedallourlives. We'restrongandhealthyand bettereducatedthanmostpeopleourage. Butwe'restupido ut here. We want to trust people. I fightagainst the impulse. Harryhasn'tlearned to do that yet. We argued about it afterward, low voice d, almost whispering.

"Nobody'ssafe, " Zahra told him. No matter how pitiful they look, they can steal younaked. Little kids, skinny and big-eyedwill make off with all your money, water, and food! I know. I used to do it to people. Maybe they died, I don't know. But I didn't die."

Harry and I both stared at her. We knewso little about her life. But to me, at that moment, Harry wasour mostdangerousquestionmark.

"You'restrongandconfident," I said to him. "You think you can takecare of yourself out here, andmaybe youcan.Butthinkwhatastabwoundora brokenbonewouldmeanouthere:Disablement,slo wdeath from infe ctionorstarvation, no medical care, nothing."

He looked at measthough he wasn't sure he wantedto knowme anymore. "What, then?" he asked. "Everyone's guilty until proveninnocent? Guilty of what? And how do they prove themselves to you?"

"I don't give a piss whether they're innocentornot,"Zahrasaid."Letthemtendtotheirownbusiness."

"Harry, your mind isstill back in the neighborhood," I said. "You still think a mistake is when yourfather yellsatyouoryoubreakafingerorchipatoothor something. Outhereamistake--onemistake--andyou may be dead. Remembe rthat guy today? What if that happened tous?"

Wehadseenamanrobbed--achubbyguyof35or

40whowaswalkingalongeatingnutsoutofapaper bag.Notsmart.Alittlekidof12or13snatchedthe nutsandran offwiththem.Whilethevictimwas distractedbythelittlekid,twobiggerkidstripped him,cuthispackstraps,drag gedthepackoffhis back, and ran off with it. The whole thing happened so fast that no one could have interfered they'd wanted to Noonetried. The victim was unhurt except for bruises and a brasions -- the sort of thing I had to put up with every day back in the neighborhood. But the victim's supplies were gone. If he had a homenear by and other supplies, he would be all right. Otherwise, his only way of surviving might be to robsome one else--if he could.

"Remember?" I asked Harry. "We don't have to hurt anyone unless they push usinto it, but we don't dare let our guard down. We can't trust people."

Harry shook his head. "What if I thought that way when I pulled that guy off Zahra?"

I held on to my temper. "Harry, you knowI don'tmeanweshouldn'ttrustorhelpeachother. Wekno weach other. We've madeacommitment to travel together."

"I'm not sure we doknoweach other."

"I am. And we can't afford yourdenial. You can't afford it."

Hejuststaredatme.

"Outhere, youadaptto your surroundings or you get killed," I said. "That' so bvious!"

NowhedidlookatmeasthoughIwereastranger.Ilooked back, hoping I knew hima swell as I thought Idid. Hehadabrainandhehadcourage.Hejust didn'twanttochange.

"Do you want to break off with us," Zahra asked, "go your own way without us?"

Hisgazesoftenedashelookedather."No,"hesaid.

"Of coursenot. But we don't have to turn into animals, for godsake."

"In a way, we do," I said. "We're a pack, the three of us, and all those other people out there aren't in it. Ifwe'reagoodpack, and weworktogether, we have a chance. You can be sure we aren't the only pack out here."

Heleanedbackagainstarock, and said with a mazement, "You damn sure talk macho enough to be a guy."

I almost hit him. Maybe Zahra and I wouldbe better off without him. But no, that wasn't true. Numbers mattered. Friendshipmattered. One realmalepresencemattered.

"Don't repeat that," I whispered, leaningclose to him. "Never say that again. There are otherpeople all over these hills; you don't know who's listening. You give me away and you weaken yourself!"

That reached him. "Sorry," he said.

"It's bad out here," Zahra said. "But most people make it if they're careful. People weakerthanus make it-- if they're careful."

Harry gave a wan smile. "I hate this world already," hesaid.

"It'snotsobadifpeoplesticktogether."

He looked from her to me and back to her again. Hesmiledatherandnodded. Itoccurred to me that he likedher, was attracted to her. That could be a problem for her later. Shewas a beautiful woman, and I would never be ebeautiful -- which didn't botherme. Boys had always seeme dto like me. But Zahra's looks grabbed male attention. If she and Harryget together, she could wind up carrying two heavy loads nor thward.

I was lost in thought about the two of them when Zahranudgedmewithherfoot.

Twobig, dirty-lookingguyswerestandingnearby, watchingus, watchingZahrainparticular.

I stood up, feeling the othersstand with me, flanking me. These guyswere too close tous. They meant to be too close. As I stoodup, I put my hand on thegun.

"Yeah?" I said, "What do youwant?"

"Not a thing," one of them said, smiling at Zahra. Both wore big holstered kniveswhich they fingered. I drew the gun. "Good deal," I said.

Theirsmiles vanished. "What, you going to shoot us for standing here?" the talk a tive one said.

I thumbed the safety. I would shoot the talker, theleader. Theotheronewouldrunaway. Healready wantedtorunaway. Hewasstaring, open-mouthed, at the gun. By the time I collapsed, he would be gone.

"Hey, notrouble!" the talkerraised his hands, backing a way. "Take it easy, man."

I let them go.Ithink it would havebeen better toshootthem.I'mafraidofguyslikethat--guyslooking fortroubl e,lookingforvictims.ButitseemsIcan't quiteshootsomeonejustbecauseI'mafraidofhim.Ikilled a man on the night of the fire, and I haven't thought much about it. But this was different. It was like what Harry sai dab out stealing. I've heard, "Thou shalt not kill," all my life, but when you have to, you kill. I wonder what Da dwouldsay about that. Butthen,hewastheonewhotaughtmetoshoot.

"We'dbetterkeepadamngoodwatchtonight,"I said.IlookedatHarry,andwasgladtoseethathelooked the way I probably had am oment before:madandworried."Let'spassyourwatchandmygun around," I told him. "Three hours per watcher."

"Youknow I'll takecare of it," I told him.

Henodded. "Youbecareful," hesaid, and closed his eyes.

I put the watch on, pulled the elastic of my sleeve down over it so that the glowof the dial wouldn't be visible by accident, and sat back against the hill to make a few quick notes. While there was still some natural light, I could write and watch.

Zahrawatchedmeforawhile, thenlaidherhandonmy arm. "Teachm eto do that," she whispered.

I looked at her, not understanding,

"Teach me to readand write."

Iwassurprised, but Ishouldn't have been. Where, in a life like hers, had the re been time or money for school. And once Richard Moss bought her, her jealous co-wives wouldn't have taught her.

"You should have come to usback in the neighborhood," I said. "We would have setuplessonsforyou."

"Richardwouldn't let me. He said I alreadyknew enough to suit him."

I groaned. "I'll teach you. We can start tomorrow morning if you want."

"Okay."Shegavemeanoddsmileandbegan orderingherbagandherfewpossessions,bundledin my scavenged pillowcase. She lay downi nher bag and turnedon her sideto look at me. "I didn'tthinkI'dlikeyou,"shesaid. "Preacher'skid,alloverthe place, teachin g, telling everybody what to do, sticking yourdamnnose in everything. But you ain't bad."

I went from surprise into amusement of my own.

"Neitherare you," I said.

"You didn't like me either?" Her turn to be surprised.

"Youwerethebestlookingwomanintheneighborhood. No, I wasn't cra zy about you. And rememberacoupleofyearsagowhenyoutriedyourharde st to make me throw upwhile I waslearning toclean andskinrabbits."

"Why'd you want to learn that, anyway?" sheasked.

"Blood, guts, worms. . . . I just figured, `There shegoesagain,stickinghernosewhereitdon'tbelong.Well, let her have it!"

"I wanted to knowthat I coulddothat--handle a dead animal, skin it, butcher it, treat its hide to make leather. I wanted to knowhow to do it, and that I could do it without getting sick."

"Why?"

"Because I thought someday I might have to. And we might out here. Same reason I put together an emergencypackandkeptitwhereIcouldgrabit."

"Iwonderedaboutthat--aboutyouhavingallthatstuff from home, I mean. At first I thought maybe you got it all when you went back. But no, you were ready for all the trouble. You saw it coming."

"No."Ishookmyhead,remembering."Noonecouldhave bee nready for that. But.. ..I thoughtsomethingwo uldhappensomeday.Ididn'tknowhowbad it wouldb eor when it would come. Buteverythingwasgettingwo rse:theclimate,the economy,crime,drugs,youknow.Ididn'tbelievewe wouldbeallowedtositbehindourwalls,lo okingclean and fat and rich to the hungry, thirsty, homeless, jobless, filthy people outside."

Sheturnedagainandlayonherback, staringupward at the sta rs. "I should have seen some of that stuff," she said. "But I didn't. Those big walls. And every body had agun. The rewere guards every night. I thought. . . . I thought we were so strong."

I put my notebook and pendown, sat on my sleepsack, and put my own pillowcasedbundlebehindme. Minewaslumpyanduncomfortabletolean on. I wanted it uncomfo rtable. I was tired. Everything ached. Given a little comfort, I would fallasleep.

Thesunwasdownnow, and our firehadgoneout except for a few glowing coals. Idrew the gunandheld it in my lap. If I needed it at all, I would need it fast. We weren 't strongenough to survive slownessor stupidmistakes.

Isat where I wasfor three weary, terrifying hours. Nothinghappenedtome, but I could see and hear thingsh appening. There were people moving around the hills, sometimes silhouetting themselves again st the skyasthey ranorwalked over the topsofhills. I saw groups and individuals. Twice I sawdogs, distant, but alarming. I heard a lot of gunfi re-- individual shots and short bursts of automatic weapons fire. That last and the dogs worried me, scaredme. A pistol would be noprotection against amachinegunorautomaticrifle. And dogsmight not know enough to be a fraid of guns. Would apack keepcoming if I shot two or three of its members? I sat in a coldsweat, longingfor walls--orat least for anothermagazineortwoforthegun.

It was nearly midnight when I wokeHarry, gave him the gun and thewatch, and madehimas uncomfortableasIcouldbywarninghimaboutthe dogs,thegunfire,andthemanypeoplewhowandered around at night. He did loo kawake and alert enough when I lay down.

I fell asleep at once. Achingand exhausted, I foundthehardgroundaswelcomingasmybedathome.

Ashoutawokeme. Then I heard gunfire--several single shots, thunderous and near by. Harry? Something fell across me before I could geto ut of mysleepsack--something bigandheavy. It knocked the breathout of me. I struggled to get it off me, knowing that it was a human body, deador unconscious. As I pushed at it and felt its heavy beards tubble and long hair, I realized it was a man, and not Harry. Some stranger.

I heard scrambling and thrashingnearme. There were grunts and sounds of blows. A fight. I couldsee theminthedarkness--twofiguresstrugglingon the ground. The one on the bottom was Harry.

Hewasfightingsomeoneoverthegun, and hewas losing. The muzzle was being forced toward him.

Thatcouldn'thappen. We couldn't lose the gunor Harry. I took a small granite boulder from our fire pit, set my teeth, and brought it down with all my strengthoutheback of the intruder's head. And I brought myself down.

It wasn't the worst pain I had evershared, but itcameclose. I wasworthless after delivering that one blow. I thin kI was unconscious for a while.

ThenZahraappearedfromsomewhere, feelingme, trying to see me. She wouldn't find a wound, of course.

I sat up, fending her off, and saw that Harry wastheretoo.

"Are they dead?" I asked.

"Never mindthem," he said. "Are you all right?" Igotup, swaying from the residual shock of the blow. I felt sickand dizzy, and my head hurt. A few days before, Harry had made me feel that way and we'dbothrecovered. Didthatmeantheman I'dhit wouldrecover?

I checked him. He wasstill alive, unconscious, notfeelinganypainnow. WhatIwasfeelingwasmy ownrea ctiontotheblowI'dstruck.

"The otherone's dead," Harry said. "This one. . . . Well, you caved in the back of hishead. I don't know why he's still alive."

"Oh, no," I whispered. "Oh hell." And then to Harry.

"Give me the gun."

"Why?" heasked.

Myfingershadfoundthebloodandbrokenskull, softandpulpyatthebackofthestranger'shead. Harrywasright. Heshouldhavebeendead.

"Give me the gun." I repeated, and held out a bloody hand for it. "Unless youwant to do this yourself."

"You can't shoot him. You can't just. . . . "

"I hope you'd find the courage to shoot me if I were like that, and out here withnomedical care to be had. We shoot him, or leave him here alive. How long do you think it will take him to die?"

"Maybehewon'tdie."

I went to my pack, struggling tonavigate without throwing up. I pulled it away from thedead man, groped withinit, and found my knife. It was a goodknife, sharpandstrong. If lickeditopenand cutthe unconscious man's throat withit.

Not until the flow of bloodstopped did I feel safe. Theman's hearthadpumped his life away into the ground.

Hecouldnotregainconsciousnessandinvolve me in his agony.

But, ofcourse, I wasfar fromsafe. Perhapsthe last two people from my old life were about to leave me. I hadshockedandhorrifiedthem.Iwouldn'tblamethem for leaving.

"Strip the bodies," I said. "Take what they have, then we'll put them into the scruboaks down the hillwherewegatheredwood."

IsearchedthemanIhadkilled, foundasmall amountofmoneyinhispantspocketandalargeramount in his right sock. Matches, a packet of almonds, a packet of dried meat, and a packet of small, round, purple pills. I found no knife, no weapon of any kin d. So this was not one of the pair that sized usupearlier in the night. I hadn't thought so. Neither of them hadbeen long-haired. Both ofthesewere.

I put the pills back in the pocket I had taken them from. Everything else, I kept. The money would help s ustainus. The food might or might or might not beedible.IwoulddecidethatwhenIcouldseeit clearly.

"No," I said. "I don't get the damage. Just the pain."

"But, I mean it felt like you hit yourself?"

I nodded. "Closeenough. WhenI was little, I used to bleed along withpeople if I hurt them or evenif I saw them hurt. I haven't done that for a few years."

"Butifthey'reunconsciousordead, youdon't feel anything."

"That's right."

"So that's why you killed that guy?"

"I killed him because hewasa threat to us. To me in a special way, but to you too. What couldwe have done about him? Abandon him to the flies, the ants, andthedogs? Youmighthavebeen willing to do that, but would Harry? Couldwest aywith him? For how long? To what purpose? Or would we dare to hunt up a cop and try to report seeing a guyh urt without involving ou rselves. Copsarenot trusting people. It hink they would want to check usout, hang on tou sfor a while, may be charge us with attacking the guyand killing his friend. It urned to look at Harry who had not said a word. "What would you have done?" I asked.

"Idon'tknow,"hesaid,hisvoicehardwithdisapproval. "I only know I wouldn't have done what you did."

"I wouldn't haveasked you to do it," I said. "I didn't ask you. But, Harry, I would do it again. I might have to do it again. That'swhy I'm telling you this." I glanced at Zahra. "I'm sorry I didn't tell you before. I knewI should, but talking about it is. . .hard. Very hard. I've never toldanyone before. Now. . . ."I took a deepbreath. "Noweverything'sup to you."

"What do you mean?" Harry demanded.

Ilookedathim, wishing I could see his expression well enough to know whether this was are alquestion. I didn't think it was. I decided to ign ore him.

"Sowhatdoyouthink?"Iasked,lookingatZahra.

Neither of them saidanything for a minute. Then Zahra began to speak, began to say such terrible things in that soft voice of hers. After a moment, Iwasn'tsureshewastalkingtous.

I took his hands, lookedat their big, pale, blunt fingers. They had a lot of strength in them, I knew, but I had never seen him use it to bully anyone. Hewasworthsometrouble, Harrywas.

"No oneiswhowe think they are," I said. "That's what we get for not beingtelepathic. But you've trusted mesofar-- and I've trusted you. I've just put my life in your hands. What are you going to do?" Was he goingto abandon menow to my "infirmity"-- instead of me maybe abandoning him at some future time due to a theoreticalbrokenarm. And I thought: One oldest kid to another, Harry; would that beresponsible behavior?

Hetookhishandsback."Well,Ididknowyouwere amanipulativebitch,"hesaid.

Zahrasmotheredalaugh.Iwassurprised.I'dneverheard him use the word befo re. I heard it nowasa sound of frustration. Hewasn't goingto leave. He was a last bit of home that I didn't have to give upyet.Howdid hefeelaboutthat?Washeangrywith meforalmostbreakingupthegroup?Hehadrea son to be, I suppose.

"Idon'tunderstandhowyoucouldhavebeenlikethis all the time," he said. "Ho would you hideyour sharing from everyone?"

"My father taught me to hide it," Itold him. "He was right. In this world, thereisn't any room for housebo und, frightened, squeamish people, and that's what I might have become if everyonehadknownaboutmealltheotherkids, forinstance. Little kidsa re vicious. Haven't you noticed?"

"But your brothers must have known."

"My father put the fear of God into them about it. He could do that. As far as I know, they never told anyone. Keith used to play 'funny' tricks on me, though."

"So...you faked everyoneout. You must be a hell ofanactor."

"Ihadto learn to pretend to be normal. My father kept trying to convince me that I was normal. He was wrong about that, but I'm glad he taught me the wayhedid."

"Maybe you arenormal. I mean if the pain isn't real, then maybe--"

"Maybethissharingthingisallinmyhead? Ofcou rse it is! And I can't get it out. Believe me, I'd love to."

17

Embrace diversity.

Unite--

Orbedivided, robbed, ruled, killed

Bythosewhoseeyouasprey. Embra ce diversity

Orbedestroyed.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

TUESDAY, AUGUST 3, 2027

(from notes expanded AUGUST 8)There's a big fire in the hills to the east of us. Wesawitbeginasathin,d arkcolumnofsmoke,rising intoanotherwise clearsky. Nowit's massive--ahillside or two? Several buildings? Many houses? Ourneighborhoodagain?

We kept looking at it, then looking away. Other people dying, losingtheir families, their homes. . . . Even whenwehadwalkedpastit, welookedback. Hadthepeoplewithpaintedfaces donethis, too? Zahrawascrying as shewalked long, cursing in avoice so soft that I could hear only a few of the bitter words.

Earlier today we left the 118 freeway to look for and finally connect with the 23. Nowwe're on the 23 withcharredovergrownwildemessononesideandneighborhoods on the oth er. We can't see the fire itself now. We've passed it, come a longway from it, put hills between it andusaswehead southward toward the coast. But we canstill see the smoke. We didn't stop for the night until it was almost dark and wewerealltiredandhungry.

We've camped away from the freeway on the wilderness side of it, out of sight, but not out of hearing of the shuffling hoardsof peopleonthemove. Ithinkthat's asound we'll hear for the whole of our journey whether west opin Northern California or go through to Canada. So many people hoping for so much up where it still rains every year, and an uneducated person might still get a job that pays in money instead of beans, wate r, potatoes, and maybeafloortosleepon.

But it's the fire that holds our attention. Maybe it was started byaccident. Maybe not. But still, peopleare losingwhat they may not be able to replace. Even iftheysurvive,insuranceisn'tworthmuchthesedays. People onthehighway,shadowyinthedarkness,had begun to reverse the flow, to drift northward to find a way to the fire. Be st to be early for the scavenging.

"Shouldwego?"Zahraasked,hermouthfullofdriedmeat. We built no fire tonight. Be st for usto vanishintothe darknessandavoidguests. Wehadputa tangleoftreesandbushesatourbacksandhoped forthebest.

"Youmeangobackandrobthosepeople?"Harry demanded.

On the otherhand, my Earthseed verseshad surprised him, and, I think, pleased him a little. Iwasn'tsure whetherhelikedthewritingorthe reasoning, buthelikedthavingsomethingtoread and talkabout.

"Poetry?" he said thismorningashe looked throughthepagesIshowedhim--pagesofmyEarthseednotebook, as it happened. "I never knew you cared about poetry."

"A lot of it isn't very poetical," I said. "But it's what I believe, and I've written it aswellasI could." I show ed him four versesin all--gentle, brief verses that might take hold of him without his realizing it and live in his memory without his intending that they should. Bits of the Bible had done that to me, staying with me even after I stopped believing.

I gave to Harry, and throughhim to Zahra, thoughts I wantedthem to keep. But I couldn't preventHarry fromkeepingotherthingsaswell:Hisnewdistrustof me,forinstance,almosthisnewdislike.Iwasnotquite Lauren Olamina to him any longer. I had seen that in his expression off and on alld ay. Odd.

Joannehadn'tlikedherglimpseoftherealmeeither. On the other hand, Zahra didn't seem to mind. But then, she hadn't knownm every well athome. Whatshelearnednow, she could accept without feeling lied to. Harry did feel lied to, and perhaps he wondered what lies I wasstill telling or living. Only time could heal that-- if he let it.

We movedwhenhe came back. He had foundus a newcampsite, near the freeway and yet private. One of thehugefreewaysignshadfallenorbeen knockeddown, and now layon the ground, propped upby a pair of dead sycamoretrees. With the trees, it formed a massive lea n-to. The rock and ash leavings of a campfire sh owed us that the placehad been used before. Perhaps there had been people here to night, but they had gone away to see what they could scavenge from the fire. Now we're here, happy to get a little privacy, a view of the hills b ack whe re the fire is, and the security, for what it was worth, of at least one wall.

"Gooddeal!"Zahrasaid,unrollinghersleepsackand settling down on top of it. "I'll takethe first watch tonight, okay?"

It was okay with me. I gave her the gun and laydown,eagerforsleep. Again I was amazed to find somuch comfortins leeping on the ground in my clothes. There's nonarcotic like exhaustion. Sometime in the night I wo keup to soft, small sounds of voices and breathing. Zahraand Harrywere making love. I turned my head and saw them at it, though they were too much involved with each other to notice me.

And, of course, no one was on watch.

I got caught up in their lovemaking, and had all I could do to lie still and keepquiet. I couldn'tescape their sensation. I couldn't keepan efficient watch. I could either writhewith them orhold myself rigid. Iheldrigid untiltheyfinished--untilHarrykissed Zahra, thengotuptoputhispantsonandbeganhiswatch.

And I lay awake afterward, angry andworried. How in hell could I talk to either of them about this? It wouldbenoneofmybusinessexceptforthetimethey cho se for doing it. But look whenthat was! We could label have been killed.

Still sitting up, Harry began to snore.

I listened for a couple of minutes, thensat up, reachedoverZahra, and shook him.

He jumped awake, stared around, then turned toward me. I couldn't see more than amoving silhouette.

"Givemethegunandgobacktosleep, "Isaid. He ju stsat there.

"Harry, you'll get us killed. Give me the gun and thewatchandliedown.I'llwakeyoulater."

He looked at the watch.

"Sorry," he said. "Guess I wasmore tired than I thought." His voice grew lesssleep-fogged. "I'm all right. I'm awake. Go back to sleep."

Hispridehadkickedin.Itwouldbealmost impossible to get the gun and thewatch from himnow.

I lay down. "Remember last night," I said. "If you care about her at all, if you want her to live, remember last night."

He didn't answer. I hoped I had surprised him. I supposed I had also embarrassed him. And maybe I had madehim feel angry and defensive. Whatever I'd done, I didn't hear him doingany more snoring.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 2027

Todaywestoppedatacommercialwaterstationand filledourselvesandallourcontainerswithclean, safe water. Commercialstations are best for that. Anything you buy from a water peddler on the freeway ought to be boiled, and still might not besafe. Boilingkills disease organisms, butmay do nothing to getrid of chemical residue--fuel, pesticide, herbicide, whateverelse has been in the bottles that peddlers use. The fact that most peddlers can't read makes the situation worse. They sometimes poison themselves.

Commercial stations let you drawwhateveryou payfor--andnotadropmore--rightoutofoneoftheir taps. Youdrinkwhateverthelocalhouseholdersaredrinking. It might taste, smell, or loo kbad, but you candepend on it not to kill you.

There aren't enough water stations. That's whywaterpeddlersexist.Also,waterstations are dangerous place s.Peoplegoing inhavemoney.People comingo ut have water, which is as good asmoney.Beggars and thieves hangaround such places--keeping the whore sanddrug dealers company. Dadwarned usall about water stations, trying to prepare usin case we everwent out and got caught far enough from home to be tempted to stop for water. His advice: "Don't do it. Suffer. Getyour rearendhome."

Yeah.

Threeisthesmallestcomfortablenumberatawaterstation. Two to watchand one to fill up. And it's good to have three ready for trouble on the way to andfromthestation. Threewouldnotstopdetermined thugs, butit wouldstopopportunists—andmost predators are opportunists. They preyon old people, lonewomen or with youngkids, handicappedpeople. . . . They don't want to get hurt. My father used tocall them coyotes. When hewas beingpolite, hecalled them coyotes.

We werecoming away with ourwater when wesawapairoftwo-leggedcoyotesgrababottleofwater from a womanwhowascarryingasizablepackand ababy. Themanwithhergrabbedthecoyotewhohad taken the water, the coyotep assed thewater tohispartner, and hispartner ranstraightintous.

I tripped him. I think it was the baby who attracted my attention, my sympathy. The tough plastic bubble that held the water didn'tbreak. The coyote didn't break either. I set my teeth, sharing the joltashe fellandthepainofhisscrapedforearms. Backhome, the young er kid shit me with that kindof thing every day.

I steppedback from the coyote and put my hand on the gun. Harry stepped upbesideme. I was glad to have him there . We looked more intimidating together.

Thehusbandofthewomanhadthrownoffhisattacker, and the two coyotes, finding themselves outnumb ere d, scampered away. Skinny, scared littlebastardsouttodotheirdailystealing.

Ipickeduptheplasticbubbleofwaterandhandeditto the man.

He tookit and said, "Thanks man. Thanks a lot."

I nodded and wewent on our way. It stillfelt strange to be called "man." I didn't like it, but that didn't matter.

"Allofasuddenyou'reagoodSamaritan,"Harrysaid. But he didn't min d. There was no disapprovalinhis voice.

"It was the baby, wasn't it?" Zahra asked.

"Yes," I admitted. "The family, really. All of them together." All of them together. They had been ablack man,aHispanic-lookingwoman,andababy who managed to look a little likeboth of them. In a few more years, a lot of the families back in theneigh borhoodwouldhavelookedlikethat.Hell, HarryandZahrawereworkingonstartingafamily likethat.AndasZa hrahadonceobserved,mixed couplescatchhellouthere.

YettherewereHarryandZahra,walkingsoclose togetherthattheycouldn'thelpnowandthenbru shingagainst ea ch other. But they kept alert, looked around. We wereon U.S. 101 now, and therewere even more walkers. Even clumsythieves would have no trouble losing themselve sin this crowd.

ButZahraandIhadhadatalkthismorningduringher readin glesson. We were supposed to beworkingon the soundsofletters and the spelling of simplewords. But when Harry went off to the bushesofourdesignated to iletarea, Istopped the lesson.

"Remember what you said to me a couple of daysago?" Iaskedher. "Mymindwaswanderingandyouwarned me. `Peopleg et killed on freeways all the time,' yousaid."

Tomysurprise, shesawwhere I washeaded at once. "Damn you," she sai d, looking up from the paper I had given her. "Youdon't sleep sound enough, that 'sall. "Shesmiled as shesaidit.

"You want privacy, I'll give itto you," I said. "Just letmeknow,andI'llguardthecampfromsomeplacea short distanceaway. Youtwocandowhatyouwant.

But no more of this shit whenyou're on watch!" Shelookedsurprised. "Didn'tthinkyousaidwordslike that."

"And I didn't think you did thingslike last night. Dumb!"

"I know. Fun, though. He'sa bigstrongboy." She paused. "You jealous?"

"Zahra!"

"Don'tworry," shesaid. "Thingstook meby surprise last night. I. . . I needed somet hing, someone. It won't be like that no more."

"Okay."

"Youjealous?"sherepeated.

I made myself smile. "I'm as humanasyou are," I said. "But I don't think I wouldhave yielded to temptation out here with noprospects, no idea what'sgoingto happen. The thought of getting pregnant would havestopped me cold."

"People have babiesout here all the time." She grinned at me. "What about you and that boyfriend of yours."

"Wewerecareful.Weusedcondoms."

Zahra shrugged. "WellHarry and me didn't. If ithappens, ithappens."

It had apparently happened to the couple whosewaterwehadsaved. Nowthey had ababytolug north.

They stayed nearustoday, that couple. I saw them every nowand then. Tall, stocky, velvet-skinned, deep -black man carrying a huge pack; short, pretty, stocky, light-brown woman withbaby andpack; mediumbr ownbabyafewmonthsold--huge-eyed babywithcurlyblackhair.

They rested when we rested. They're campednow not far behindus. They look more like potential allies thanpotentialdangers, but I'llkeepaneyeonthem. THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 2027

Late today wecamewithin sight of the ocean. None of us have everseenit before, andwe had togocloser, lookatit, campwithinsightandsoundandsmell of it. Once we hadd ecided to do that, wewalkedshoelessin thewaves, pantslegsrolledup. Sometime swe just stood and stared at it: the Pacific Ocean-- the largest, deepest body of water on earth, almost half-a-world of water. Yet, as it was, we couldn't drink anyofit.

Harrystrippeddowntohisunderwearandwaded outuntilthecoolwaterreachedhischest. Hecan'tswim, of co urse. None of u scan swim. We've neverbeforeseenwaterenoughtoswimin. Zahraand Iwatche dHarry with a lot of concern. Neither of usfeltfreetofollowhim. I'm supposed to be amanand Zahra attract senough of the wrong kindof attention with all herclothes on. We decided to wait until after sundown andgoin fully clothed, just to washaway some of the grime and stink. Then we could changeclothes. Webothhadsoapandwewereeagertomakeu se of it.

There were other people on thebeach. In fact, thenarrowstripofsandwascrowdedwithpeople, though they managed t ostay out of each others' way. They had spread themselves out and seemed farmore tolerant of one a nother than they had duringournightinthehills.Ididn'thearanyshootingor fighting. The re werenodogs, no obviousthefts, norape.Perhapstheseaandthecoolbreezelulled them.Harrywasn'ttheonlyonetostripdownandgo intothe water.Quiteafewwomenhadgoneout, wearingalmostnothing.Maybethiswasasafer placethananywe'dseenso far.

Somepeoplehadtents, and several had built fires. We settled in against the remnants of a small building. We were always, it seemed, looking for wall stoshield us. Wasit better to have them and perhaps get trapped agains them or to campin the open and bevulnerable one very side? We didn't kno w. It just felt better to have at least one wall.

I salvaged a flat piece of woodfrom the building, wentafewyardsclosertotheocean, and began to dig into the san d. I dug until I found dampness. Then I waited.

"What's supposed to happen?" Zahraasked. Until now she had watched me without saying anything.

"Drinkablewater,"Itoldher."Accordingtoacouple ofbooksIread,waterissupposedtoseepup throughthesand withmostofthesaltfilteredoutofit."

She looked into the damp hole. "When?" sheasked. I dug a little more. "Give it time," I said. "Ifthe trick works, we ought toknow about it. Itmightsave our lives someday."

"Orpoisonusorgiveusadisease," shesaid. She lookeduptosee Harry coming towardus, dripping wet. Even his hairwaswet.

"Hedon'tlookbadnaked,"shesaid.

He wasstill wearing his underwear, of course, but I couldseewhatshemeant. Hehadanice, strong-lookingbody, and Idon't think heminded our looking at it. And he looked clean and hed idn't stink.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 2027

Late today wecamewithin sight of the ocean. None of us have everseenit before, andwe had togocloser, lookatit,campwithinsightandsoundandsmell of it. Once we hadd ecided to do that, wewalkedshoelessin thewaves,pantslegsrolledup. Sometime swe just stood and stared at it: the Pacific Ocean-- the largest, deepest body of water on earth, almost half-a-world of water. Yet, as it was, we couldn't drink anyofit.

Harrystrippeddowntohisunderwearandwaded outuntilthecoolwaterreachedhischest.Hecan't swim,ofco urse.Noneofuscanswim.We'venever beforeseenwaterenoughtoswimin.ZahraandIwatche dHarry with a lot of concern. Neither of usfeltfreetofollowhim.I'msupposedtobeamanandZahra attract senough of the wron g kindof attention with all herclothes on. We decided to wait until after sundown andgoin fully clothed, just to washaway some of the grime and stink. Then we could changeclothes.Webothhadsoapandwewe reeagertomakeu se of it.

There were other people on thebeach. In fact, thenarrowstripofsandwascrowdedwithpeople, though they managed t ostay out of each others' way. They had spread themselves out and seemed farmore tolerant of one a nother than they had

during our night in the hills. I didn'the arany shooting or fighting. The re were no dogs, no obvious the fts,

norape. Perhapstheseaandthecoolbreezelulled them. Harrywasn't theonly one to stripdown and go into the water. Quite a few women had go ne out, we aring almost nothing. May be this was as a fer place than anywe'd seen so far.

Somepeoplehadtents, and several had built fires. We settle din against the remnants of a small building. We were always, it seemed, looking for wallstoshield us. Wasit better to have them and perhap sget trapped against them or to campin theopenandbevulnerableoneveryside? Wedidn'tkno w. It just felt better to have at least one wall.

I salvaged a flat piece of woodfrom the building, wentafewyardsclosertotheocean, and began to dig into the san d. I dug until I found dampness. Then I waited.

"What's supposed to happen?" Zahraasked. Until now she had watched me without saying anything.

"Drinkablewater,"Itoldher."Accordingtoacouple ofbooksIread,waterissupposedtoseepup throughthesand withmostofthesaltfilteredoutofit."

She looked into the damp hole. "When?" sheasked. I dug a little more. "Give it time," I said. "Ifthe trick works, we ought toknow about it. Itmightsave our lives someday."

"Orpoisonusorgiveusadisease," shesaid. She lookeduptosee Harry coming towardus, dripping wet. Even his hairwaswet.

"Hedon'tlookbadnaked,"shesaid.

He wasstill wearing his underwear, of course, but I

couldseewhatshemeant. Hehadanice, strong-lookingbody, and Idon't think heminded our looking at it. And he looked clean and he didn't stink.

"So do you mind?" I asked again.

They looked at each other.

"Idon'tmind,"Zahrasaid."Longaswekeepaneyeon them."

"Whydoyouwantthem?"Harryasked,watching me.

"They need us more than weneed them," I said.

"That's not a reason."

"They're potential allies."

"Wedon'tneedallies."

"Not now. But we'dbe damned fools to wait and try to get them whenwe doneed them. By then, they might not be around."

Heshruggedandsighed."Allright.LikeZahrasays,as lon gas we watch them."

I got up and went overto the couple. I could see them straighten and go tenseasI approached. I was careful not to go too close ormove too fast.

"Hello," Isaid. "If you two would like to take turns bathing, you can come overand joinus. That mightbe saferforthebaby."

"Joinyou?"themansaid."You'reaskingustojoin you?"

"Inviting you."

"Why?"

"Why not. We're natural allies-- the mixed couple and the mixed group."

"Allies?" the man said, andhelaughed.

Ilookedathim, wondering why helaughed.

"What the hell do you really want?" he demanded. I sighed. "Come joinusif you want to. You're welcome, and ina pinch, five is better than two." I turnedand left them. Let them talk it over anddecide.

"They coming?" Zahraasked when I got back.

"I think so," I said. "Although maybenot tonight."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 6, 2027

We built a fire and had ahot meal last night, but the mixed family did not join us. I didn't blame them. People stay alive out here by beingsuspicious. But they didn't go away either. And it wasnoaccident that they had chosen to stay nearus. It was a goodthingforthemthattheywerenearus. Thepeaceful beachscenech angedlatelastnight. Dogscame onto the sand.

They cameduring my watch. I saw movement fardownthebeachandIfocusedonit. Thentherewassho uting, screams. I thought it was a fight or a robbery. I didn't see thedogsuntil they broke awayfromagroupofhum ansandraninland. One of them was carrying something, but I couldn't tellwhat it was. I watched them until they vanishe dinland. People chased them for a short distance, but the dogswere too fast. Some one 's property was lost-- some one 's food, nodoubt.

I was onedge after that. I got up, moved to theinlandendofourwall,sattherewhereIcouldseemore of the beach. I was there, sitting still with the guninmylapthenIspottedmovementperhapsa longcityblockupthebea ch.Darkformsagainstpale sand. More dogs. Three of them. They nosed aroundthesandforamoment,thenh eadedourway. I sat as still as I could, wat ching. So manypeoplesleptwithoutpostingwatches. Thethree do gswanderedamongthecamps,investigating whattheypleased,andnoonetriedtodrivethem away. Ontheother hand,people'soranges,potatoes, and grain mea lcouldn't be very tempting to a dog. Our small supply of driedmeat might be another matter. But no dog wouldget it.

But the dogs stopped at the camp of the mixed couple. I rememberedthe baby and jumpedup. At the samemoment, the baby began to cry. I shoved Zahra with my foot and she cameawake all at once. She could to that.

"Dogs," I said. "Wake Harry." Then I headed for the mixed couple. The woman was screamingand beatingatadogwithherhands. Aseconddogwas dodgingtheman's kicksandgoing for the baby. Only the third dog was clear of the family.

I stopped, slipped thesafety, and as the third dog went in toward thebaby, I shot it.

Thedogdroppedwithoutasound.Idropped,too, gasping, feelingkickedinthechest. Itsurprisedme howhardthelooses and was to fallon.

Atthecrackoftheshot, theothertwodogstookoffinland. From my prone position, I sighted on themas they ran. I might have been able to pick off one more of them, but I le tthem go. I hurt enough already. I coul dn't catch my breath, it seemed. As I gasped, though, it occurred to me that pronewas a goodshootingpo sitionforme. Sharingwouldbelessableto in capacitate me at onceif Ishot two-handed and prone. I filed the knowledgeaway for future use. Also, it was interesting that the dogshadbeen frightened by my shot. Was it the sound that sca red them or the fact that one of them hadbeen hit? I wish I knewmore about them. I've read books about them being intelligent, loyal pets, but that's all in the past. Dogs now are wild animals who will eat a baby if they can.

I feltthat the dog I had shot was dead. It wasn't moving. But by now a lot of people wereawakeand moving around. A living dog, even wounded, would be frantic to getaway.

The pain in my chest began to ebb. When I could breathewithoutgasping, I stood upand walked backto ourcamp. Therewassomuch confusion by then that no one noticed meex cept Harry and Zahra. Harry cam eout to meet me. He took the gun from my hand, then took my armand steered me back to mysleepsack.

"So you hit something," he saidas I sat gasping again from the small exertion.

"Isyourbabyallright?" Iasked.

"Hehadscratchesandsandinhiseyesandmouth frombeingdragged."Shestrokedthesleeping baby'sblackhair. "Iputsalveonthescratchesand washedhiseyes.He'sallrightnow.He'ssogood.He only cried a little bit."

"Hardly ever cries," Travis said with quiet pride. Travishasanunusualdeep-blackcomplexion--skin sosm ooththat Ican't believe he has ever in his life had apimple. Looking at himmakes mewant to touch him and see how all that perfects kinfeels. He's young, good looking, and intense--astocky, muscula rman, tall, but a little shorter and a little heavier than Harry. Natividadis stocky, too--apale brown woman with a round, pretty face long black hair bound upinacoil at opher head. She's short, but it is n't surprising some how that she can carry a packanda babyandkeep up a steady paceall day. I like her, feel inclined to trust her. I'll have to be careful about that. But I don't believe she would steal from us. Travis has notacceptedusyet, but she has. We'vehelpedherbaby. We'reherfriends.

"We're going to Seattle," she told us. "Travis has an aunt there. Shesays we canstay with heruntil we find work. Wewant to find work that pays money."

"Don't we all," Zahraagreed. She sat on Harry'ssleepsackwithhim,hisarmaroundher. Tonight couldbetire someforme.

TravisandNatividadsatontheirthreesacks, spread outtogivetheirbabyroomtocrawlwhenhewoke up. Natividadhadharnessedhimtoherwristwitha lengthofclothesline.

I felt alone between the two couples. I let them talkabouttheirhopesandrumorsofnorthernedens. Itook out my notebookand began to write up the day's events, still savoring the last of the chocolate. The babya w oke hungry andcrying. Natividadopenedherlooseshirt, gavehimabreast, and moved over near me to see what I was doing.

"You can read and write," she said with surprise. "I thought you might be drawing. What are you writing?"

"She'salwayswriting,"Harrysaid."Asktoreadherpoetry. Some of it isn't bad."

I winced. My name is androgynous, in pronunciationatleast--Laurensoundslikethemoremasculine Loren. Butpronounsaremorespecific,andstilla problemforHarry.

"She?" Travisasked right on cue. "Her?"

"Damn it, Harry," I said. "We forgot to buy that tape for your mouth."

Heshookhishead, then gave mean embarrassed smile. "I've kno wn you all my life. It isn't easy to rememberto switch all your pronouns. I think it's all right this time, though."

"I told you so!" Natividad said to her husband. Then she lookedembarrassed. "I told him you didn't look likeaman, "shesaidtome. "You'retallandstrong, but. . . I don't know. Youdon't have a man's face."

Ihad,almost,aman'schestandhips,somaybeIsho uld be glad tohear that I didn't have a man's face-- though it wasn't going to help me on the road.

"Webelievedtwomenandawomanwouldbemorelikely to survive than two women and a man," I said.

"Out here, the trick is to avoid on frontation by looking strong."

"The three ofusaren't going tohelp you lookstrong,"Travissaid.Hesoundedbitter.Didheresent the baby and Natividad?

"You are our natural allies," I said. "You sneered at that last time I said it, but it's true. The baby won't weakenusmuch, I hope, and he'll have a better chance of surviving with five adults around him."

"I can take care of my wife and my son," Travissaid with more pride than sense. I decidednot to hear him.

"I think you and Natividad will strengthen us," I said.

"Two more pairs of eyes, two morepairs of hands. Do you have knives?"

"Yes."Hepattedhispantspocket."Iwishwehad gunslikeyou."

Iwishedwehadguns--plural--too.ButIdidn'tsayso. "You and Natividad loo kstrongand healthy," I said.

"Predators will look at a group like the five of us and move on to easierprey."

Travisgrunted, still noncommittal. Well, I had helped him twice, and now I was a woman. It might take him a while to forgive me for that, no matter howgrateful hewas.

"I want to hear some of your poetry," Natividad said.

"The man we worked for, hiswife used to writepoetry. Shewouldreadittomesometimes when shewas feelinglonely. Ilikedit. Readmesomething of yours before it gets too dark."

Oddtothinkofarichwomanreadingtohermaid-- whichwaswhoNatividadhadbeen.MaybeIhadthewrong ide aof richwomen. But then, everyone gets lonely. I put my journal downand picked up my book of Earthseed verses. I chosesoft, nonpreachyverses,goodforroad-wearymindsandbodies.

18

Once or twiceeachweek

A Gathering of Earthseed isagoodandnecessarything. It vents emotion, then quietsthemind.

It focuses attention, strengthen spurpose, and unifies people.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SUNDAY, AUGUST8, 2027

"You believe in all this Earthseed stuff, don't you?"Travisaskedme.

It was our day off, our day of rest. We hadleft the highway to find a beach wherewe could camp for the day and night and be comfortable. The SantaBarbarabeachwehadfoundincludedapartly burnedparkwhere thereweretreesandtables. It wasn'tcrowded, and we could have a littleday time privacy. The wate rwas only a short walkaway. The two couples took turns disappearing while I watched their packs and the baby. Interesting that the Douglases were already comfortable trusting mewith all that was precious to them. We didn't trust them to watch alone last night or the night before, thoughwe did make them watch. We had no walls to put our backsagainst last night so it wasuseful to have two watchers at a time. Natividad watchedwith me and Travis watched with Harry. Finally, Zahra watchedalone.

Iorganizedthat, feelingthatitwastheschedulethatwould be mos tcomfortable to both couples. Neither wouldberequired to trust the other too much.

Now, amid the outdoor tables, firepits, pines, palms, and sycamores, trustseems not to be aproblem. If you turn your back to the burned portion which is barren and ugly, this is a beautiful place, and it's far enough from the highway not to be found by the ever-flowing river of people moving north. I found it because I had maps--inparticular, astreet map of much of Santa Barba ra County. My grandparents' maps helpedus explor eaway from the highwayeven though many street signs were fallen or gone. There were enough left for us to find beaches when we were near them.

Therewere locals at this beach-people who had left real homes to spend an Aug ust day at the beach. I eaves dropped on a few fragments of conversation and found out that much.

Then I tried talking to someof them. To my surprise,mostwerewillingtotalk. Yes, the parkwas beautiful except where som epainted fools had set fires. The rumors were that they did it to fight for the poor, to expose or destroythe goods hoarded by the rich. But a park by these awasn't goods. It was open to everyone. Why b urn it? No one knew why.

No one knewwhere the fad of painting yourself andgettinghighondrugsandfirehadcome from, either. Most peoplesuspected it had begunin Los Angeles where, according to them, most stupid or wicked thingsbegan. Localprejudice. I didn't tell any of them I was from the L.A. area. I just smiled and askeda bout the local job situation. Some peoplesaidtheyknewwhereIcouldworktoearnamealor a"safe"placetosle ep,butnooneknewwhereI couldearnmoney. Thatdidn'tmeanthereweren't anysuchjobs,butiftherewere,they wouldbehardto find and harder to qualify for. That's goin gto be a problem whereverwe go. And yet we know a lot, the three of us, the five of us. We know how to do a great many things. There must be a way to put it alltogetherandmakeussomethingotherthan domesticservantsworkingforroomandboard. Wemake an interesting unit.

Waterisvery expensive here-- worse than in Los Angelesor Ventura Counties. We allwent to a water station this morning. Still no freeway watersellers forus.

Ontheroadyesterday, we saw three deadmen--agroup together, young, unmarked, but covered with the blood they had vomited, their bodie sbloated and beginning to stink. We passed them, lookedat them, took nothing from their bodies. Their packs--if they'd hadany--were already gone. Their clothes, we did not want. And their canteens-- all three still had canteens-- their canteens, no one wanted.

WeallresuppliedyesterdayatalocalHanningJoss. Wewererelievedandsurprisedtoseeit--agood dependable placewherewecouldbuyallweneeded from solid food for thebaby to soa pto salvesfor skin chafed by salt water, sun, andwalking. Natividadboughtnewlinersforherbaby carrierandwashedanddriedaplasticbagof filthy oldones. Zahrawentwithherintotheseparatelaundry area of the sto re to washanddry some of ourfilthyclothing. Weworeoursea-washedclothing, salty, but not quite stinkin g. Paying to wash clotheswas aluxurywecouldnotoftenafford, yetnoneof us found it easy to be filthy. We weren't used to it. Wewereallhoping for cheaperwater in the north. I even bou ght as econd clip for the gun-plus solvent, oil, and brushes to clean the gun. It had bothered me, not being able to clean it before. If the gun failed us when we needed it, we could be killed. The new clip was a comfort, too. It gave us a chance to reload fast and keep shooting.

Nowweloungedintheshadeofpinesand sycamores, enjoyed these abreeze, rested, and talked. I wrote, fleshingo ut my journal notes for the week. I was just finishing that when Travissat downnext to mean dasked his question:

"You believe in all this Earthseed stuff, don't you?"

"Every word," I answered.

"But. . .you made it up."

I reached down, picked up a small stone, and put it on the table betweenus. "If I could analyze this and tell you all that it was made of, would that mean I'dmadeupitscontents?"

Hedidn'tdomorethanglanceattherock. Hekepthis eye son me. "So what did you analyze to getEarthseed?"

"Other people," I said, "myself, everything I could read, hear, see, all the history I could learn. Myfather is--was--aministerandateacher. My stepmotherrananeighborhoodschool. I hada chance to see a lot."

"What did yourfather think of your idea of God?"

"He neverknew."

"You never had the guts to tell him."

Ishrugged."He'stheonepersonintheworldI workedhard not to hurt."

"Dead?"

"She taught you about entropy?" Harry asked.

"She taught me to readand write," Travissaid.

"Then she taught me to teach myself. The man sheworkedforhadalibrary--awholebigroomfullof books."

"He let you read them?" I asked.

"He didn't let me near them." Travisgave me a humorless smile. "I read them anyway. My mother would sneakthem to me."

Of course. Slavesdid that two hundredyears ago.

Theysneakedaroundandeducatedthemselvesasbe st theycould, sometimes suffering whipping, sale, or mutilation for their efforts.

"Did he ever catch you or her at it?" I asked.

"No." Travis turned to looktoward thesea. "Wewere careful. It was important. She neverborrowed more thanonebookatatime.Ithinkhiswifeknew,but shewasadecentwoman.Sheneversaidanything. Shewastheone whotalkedhimintolettingmemarry Natividad."

The son of the cook marrying one of the maids. That was like something out of another era, too.

"ThenmymotherdiedandallNatividadandIhad waseachother,andthenthebaby.Iwasstayingon asgardener-h andyman,butthenthatoldbastardwe workedfordecidedhewantedNatividad.Hewouldtry to watch when she fed the baby. Couldn't let her alone. That's why we left. That's why his wife helped us leave. She gaveu s money. She knewit wasn't Natividad's fault. And I knew I didn'twant to have to kill the guy. So we left."

Inslaverywhenthathappened, therewas nothing the slaves could do about it--ornothing that wouldn't get them killed, sold, or beaten.

IlookedatNatividadwhosatashortdistanceaway, onspreadoutsleepsacks, playingwithherbabyand talkingto Zahra. Shehadbeenlucky. Didsheknow? Howmanyotherpeoplewerelesslucky--unableto escapethe master's attentions or gain the mistress's sympathies. How far did masters and mistresses gothesed a ys toward putting less than submissive servants in their places?

"I still can't seechangeorentropy as God, "Travissaid, bringing the conversation back to Earthseed."

"Then showme a more pervasive power than change," I said. "It isn't just entropy. Godismore complex than that. Human behavioral one should teach you that much. And there' sstill more complexity when you're dealing with several things at once--asyoual ways are. There are all kinds of changes in the universe."

"Thenthey'resupposedtodowhat?"hedemanded.

"Readapoem?"

"Orrememberatruthoracomfortoraremindertoaction," I said. "Peopled othat all the time. They reach back to the Bible, the Talmud, the Koran, or some other religiousbook that helps themdeal withthefrighteningch angesthathappeninlife."

"Changedoesscaremostpeople."

"I know. Godisfrightening. Best to learn to cope."

"Your stuff isn't very comforting."

"It is after a while. I'm still growing into it myself. God isn't good or evil, doesn't favor you orhate you, and yet God is better partnered thanfought."

"Your Goddoesn't careabout you at all," Travissaid.

"All the more reasonto care for myself andothers. All the more reasonto create Earthseedcommunitiesa ndshapeGodtogether.`GodisTrick ster, Teacher, Chaos, Clay.' We decide whichaspectweembrace--and howtodealwiththeothers."

"Is that what you want to do? Set up Earthseedcommunities?"

"Yes."

"Andthenwhat?"

Thereitwas. Theopening. Iswallowed and turned a little so that I could see the burned over area. It was so da mnugly. Hard to think anyone had done that on purpose.

"And then what?"Travis insisted. "A God like yourswouldn'thaveaheavenforpeopletohopefor, so whatisth ere?"

SUNDAY, AUGUST15, 2027

I thinkTravisCharlesDouglasismy firstconvert. Zahra Moss is my second. Zahra has listenedasthe days p assed, andasTravis and I went on arguingoffandon.Sometimessheaskedquestionsor pointedoutwhatshesawasinconsistencies. Afterawhile, she said. "I don't car eabout noouterspace. You ca nkeepthat part of it. But if you want to puttogethersomekindofcommunitywherepeoplelook outforeachoth eranddon'thavetotakebeing pushedaround, I'm with you. I've been talking to Natividad. I don't want to live the way she had to. I don't want to live the way my mama had to either."

Iwonderedhowmuchdifferencetherewasbetween Natividad'sformeremployerwhotreatedheras thoughheo wnedherandRichardMosswhopurcha sedyoung girls to bepart of his harem. It was all a matter of persona I feeling, no doubt. Natividadhadresentedheremployer.Zahrahadacceptedand perhapslovedRichardMoss.

EarthseedisbeingbornrighthereonHighway101-- onthatportionof101thatwasonceElCamino

Real, the royal highway of California's Spanish past. Now it's a highway, a river of the poor. A river flooding north.

I'vecome to thinkthat Ishould be fishing that riverevenasIfollowitscurrent.Ishouldwatchpeoplenot only to spot thos ewho might be dangerous to us, but to find those few like Travis and Natividadwhowouldjoinus andbewelcome.

Andthenwhat? Findaplacetos quatand take over? Actasakindofgang? No. Not quite agang. We aren't gang types. I don't want gang type swith theirneedtodominate,robandterrorize. Andyetwemight have to dominate. W emight have to rob to survive, and eventerrorize to scare off or kill enemies. We'll have to be very careful how we allowournee dstoshapeus. Butwemusthavearable land, adependable water supply, and enough freedom from attack to let use stablish ourselves and grow.

Itmightbepossibletofindsuchanisolatedplace alongthecoast, and make a deal with the inhabitants. If there were a few more of us, and if we were better armed, we might provide security in exchange for living room. We might also provide education plus reading and writing services to adultilliterates. There might be a market for that kind of thing. So many people, children and adults, a re illiterate these days. . . . We might be able to do it--growour own food, growour selves and our neighbors into something brand new. Into Earthseed.

Parable of the Sower

The ground beneath your feet moves, Changes.

Thegalaxiesmovethroughspace. Thestarsignite, burn, age, cool, Evolving.

GodisChange. Godprevails.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 2027

(from notes expanded SUNDAY, AUGUST 29)

Earthquake today.

Ithitearlythismorningjustaswewerebeginning theday'swalk,anditwasastrongone. The ground itselfgave alow, gratingrumble likeburied thunder. It jerkedandshuddered, then seemed to drop. I'm sure it did drop, though I don't known ow far. Once the shaking stopped, everything looked the same--except for sudden patche sof dust thrown up here and there in the brown hills around us.

Severalpeoplescreamedorshoutedduringthequake. Some, burdened by heavy packs, lost their footing and fell into the dirt oro nto the brokenasphalt. Travis, with Dominiconhischestanda heavypackonhisback was almost one of these. He stumbled, staggered, and managed somehow to catch himself. The baby, unhurt, but jolted by the suddenshaking, begantocry, adding to the noise of two olderchildren walking nearby, the sudden heavypackonhisback was almost one of the suddenshaking, begantocry, adding to the noise of two olderchildren walking nearby, the sudden heavypackonhisback was almost one of the suddenshaking, begantocry, adding to the noise of two olderchildren walking nearby, the suddenshaking heavypackonhisback was almost one of the suddenshaking heavypackonhisback was almost talking of almost everyone, and the gasps of an oldmanwhohadfallenduringthequake.

Iputasidemyusualsuspicionsandwenttosee whethertheoldmanwasallright--notthatIcouldhave done much to help him if he hadn't been. I retrievedhiscaneforhim--ithadlandedbeyondhis reach--andhelpedhimup.He wasaslightasachild, thin, toothless, and frightened of me.

Igavehimapatontheshoulderandsenthimonhis way, checking when his backwasturned to see that he hadn't lifted anything. The worldwas full of thie ves. Oldpeople and young kidswere often pickpockets.

Nothingmissing.

Another man nearby smiled at me--anolder, but notyetoldblackmanwhostillhadhisteeth,andwho pushedhi sbelongingsintwinsaddlebagshangingfrom a small, stu rdy metal-framedcart. He didn't say anything, but I liked hissmile. I smiledback. Then IrememberedthatIwassupposedtobeaman,and wonderedwhetherhehad seenthroughmydi sguise. Not that it mattered.

IwentbacktomygroupwhereZahraandNatividad werecomfortingDominicandHarrywaspickingupsomething from the roadside. I went to Harry, and sawthathehadfoundafilthyragknottedintoasmall, tight ball aroundsomething. Harry tore the rotten cloth and a roll of money fell out into hishands. Hundreddollarbills. Two orthreedozenofthem.

"Put it away!"I whispered.

Hepushedthemoneyintoadeeppantspocket.

"Newshoes,"hewhispered."Goodones, and other things. Do you need a nything?"

Ihadpromisedtobuyhimanewpairofshoesas soonaswereachedadependablestore. Hiswereworn out. No w another ideaoccurred to me. "If you have enough," I whispered, "Buy yourself a gun. I'll still get your shoe s. You get a gun!" Then I spoke totheothers, ignoringhissurprise. "Iseveryoneall right?"

Everyonewas. Dominicwashappyagain, ridingnow on hismother's back, and playing with her hair. Zahrawasrea djustingherpack, and Travishad gone on and wastaking a look at the small community ahead. This was farmed untry. We'd passed through nothing for days except small, dying towns, with ering roads idecommunities and farms, someworking, some abandoned and growing weeds.

We walked forward toward Travis.

"Fire,"hesaidasweapproached.

One house down the hill from the road smoked from several of its windows. Already people from the highway had begun to drift down toward it. Trouble. The people who owned the house might manage to putouttheirfireandstillbeoverwhelmedby scavengers.

"Let's getaway from here," I said. "The people downtherearestillstrong, and they'regoing to feel besiege d soon. They'll fight back."

"We might find something wecanuse," Zahraargued.

"There'snothingdownthereworthourgettingshotover," I said. "Let's go!" I led the way past the small communityandwewerealmostclearofitwhenthe gunfirebegan.

Therewere people still on the road withus, but many had flooded down into the small community to steal. The crowd wouldnot confine its attention to the one burning house, and all the householders would have to resist.

Thereweremoreshotsbehindus--firstsingleshots, thenanunevencracklingofexchangedfire,thentheunmistaka ble chatter of automati cweapons fire. We walked faster, hoping that we were beyond the rangeofanythingaimedinourdirection.

"Shit!" Zahra whispered, keeping up withme. "I should have known that was goingto happen. People out here in the middle of nowhere gotta be tough."

"Idon'tthinktheirtoughnesswillgetthemthroughthis day, though," I said, looking back. There was muchm oresmokerisingnow,anditwasrisingfrom morethanoneplace. Distantshoutsandscreamsmixed with the gunfire. Stupid place to put a naked little community. They sho uld have hidden their homesaway in the mountainswhere few strangerswouldeverse ethem. That was something formetokee pin mind. All the people of this community could do now was take a few of their tormentors with them. To morro with survivors of this place would be on the road with scraps of their belonging son their backs.

"Sounds like women," Harry said.

I sighed. "Let'sgo see. It might just be a matter of pushing somewood off them or something." Harrycaught mebytheshoulder. "Yousure?"

"Yeah." I took the gun out andgave it to him in casesomeoneelse'spainmademeuseless."Watchourback s ," Isaid.

We went in wary and tentative, knowing that a call for help couldbefalse, could lure people to their attackers. A few other people followedusoff theroad, and Harryhungback, staying between them and us. Bankoleshoved his cartalong, keeping up with me.

There were two voicescalling from the rubble. Bothsoundedlikewomen. Onewaspleading, theother cursing. We located them by the sound of their voice s, then Zahra, Travisand I began throwing off rubble-- dry, brokenwood, plaster, plastic, andbrickfromanancientchimney.BankolestoodwithHarry, watching,andlookingformidable.Didhehavea gun?Ihopedhedid.Weweredrawingasmall audienceofhung ry-eyedscavengers.Mostpeoplelooked to se ewhat we were doing, andwent on. Afewstayedandstared.If thewomenhadbeen trappedsincetheearthquake,itwassurprisingthat noonehadcomealreadytostealtheirbelo ngingsand set fire to the rubble, leaving them in it. I hoped wewouldbeabletogetthewomenoutandgetback onthehighwaybeforesomeonedecidedtorushus.No doubt they alrea dy wouldhave if there hadbeen anything of value in sight.

Natividad spoke to Bankole, then put Dominic in oneofhissaddlebagsandfelttoseethatherknifewasstill in her pocket. I didn't like that much. Bette rsheshouldkeepwearingthebabysowecouldleaveat arunifshehad to.

We found apaleleg, bruised and bleeding but unbroken, pinned under abeam. A whole section of walland ceiling plus some of the chimney had fallen on these women. We moved the loose stuff then worked to gether to lift heavier pieces. At last wedragged the women out by their exposed limbs -- an armandaleg for one, both legs for the other. I didn't enjoy it any more than they did.

On the otherhand, it wasn't that bad. Thewomen hadlostsomeskinhereandthere, and one was bleed in gfrom the nose and mouth. She spat outblood and aco uple ofteethand cursed and tried to get up. I let Zahra help her up. All I wanted to do now was getaway from her.

The other one, facewet with tears, just sat and staredatus. Shewasquietnowinablank, unnatural way. Too quiet. When Travistried to help her up, she cringed and cried out. Travislet her alone. She didn't seem to be hurt beyond a few scratches, but she might have hit her head. Shemight be inshock.

"Where'syourstuff?"Zahrawasaskingthebloodyone. "We're going to have to get away fromh ere fast."

I rubbed my mouth, trying to get past an irrational certainty that two of my own teeth were gone. I felt horrible--scrapedandbruisedandthrobbing, yet wholeandunbroken, undamagedinanymajorway. I just wanted to huddle somewhe re until I felt lessmiserable. Itookadeepbreathandwenttothe frightened, cringing woman.

"Canyouunderstandme?"Iasked.

Shelookedatme, thenlooked around, sawher companion wiping away blood with a grimy hand, and tried to get up and runtoher. Shetripped, started to fall, and I caught her, grateful that shewasn't very big.

"Your legsare allright," I said, "but take it easy. We have to get out of here soon, and you've got to be able to walk."

"Whoare you?" sheasked.

"A total stranger," I said. "Try to walk."

"Therewasanearthquake."

"Yeah. Walk!"

She took a shaky stepaway from me, then another. Shestaggeredovertoherfriend. "Allie?" shesaid. Herfri endsawher, stumbledtoher, huggedher, smearedherwithblood, "Jill! Thank God!"

"Here'stheirstuff," Travissaid. "Let'sget them out ofherewhilewe still can."

We made them walka little more, tried to makethemseeandunderstandthedangerofstayingwherewewere. We couldn't dra gthem withus, and what would have been the point of diggingthem out, then leaving them at the mercy of scavengers. They hadto walkalongwithusuntiltheywerestrongerandable to tak ecare of themselves.

"Okay," the bloody onesaid. She was the smaller and tougher of the two, not that there was that much physical difference between them. Two medium-size, brown-haired white women in their twenties. They might be sisters.

"Okay," the bloody onerepeated. "Let's getout ofhere." Shewaswalkingwithoutlimpingorstaggering now, thoughhercompanion was less steady.

"Give me mystuff," shesaid. I can't describe the pain.

The others told me later that I screamedas they'd never heardanyonescream. I'm not surprised. Nothingh as everhurt me that muchbefore.

Afterawhile, the agonyinmychestebbed and died. That is, the man on top of me ble dand died. Not until then could I begin to be aware of something other than pain.

ThefirstthingIheardwasDominic,crying.

I understood thenthat I had also heard shots fired--severalshots. Wherewaseveryone? Werethey wounde d?

Dead?Beingheldprisoner?

I kept my body still beneath thedead man. He was painfully heavy as deadweight, and his body odorwas nauseating. Hehadbledallovermychest, and, if my nose wa sany judge, in death, he hadurinated on me. Yet I didn't dare move until I understood the situation.

I opened my eyes just a little.

BeforeIcouldunderstandwhatIwasseeing, someonehauledthestinkingdeadmanoffine.I foundmyselflooking intotwoworriedfaces:Harry andBankole.

I coughed and tried to get up, but Bankole heldme down.

"Are you hurt anywhere?" hedemanded.

"No, I'm all right." Isaid. Isaw Harrystaring at all the blood, and I added, "Don't worry. The other guy did all the bleeding."

They helped me up, and I discovered I was right. The deadman hadurinated on me. I was almost frantic with the need to strip off my filthy clothes and wash. But that had to wait. No matter how disgu sting

I was, I wouldn't undress in daylight where I could be seen. I'dhadenoughtrouble for one day.

Ilookedaround,sawTravisandNatividad comfortingDominicwhowasstillscreaming.Zahra waswiththetwon ewgirls,standingguardbesidethem as they sat on theg round.

"Arethosetwookay?" Iasked.

Harrynodded."They'rescaredandshakenup,but they'reallright.Everyone'sallright--excepthimand hisfrien ds."Hegesturedtowardthedeadman. Therewerethreemoredeadlyingnearby.

"Thereweresomewounded,"Harrysaid."Weletthem go."

Inodded."We'dbetterstripthesebodiesandgotoo.We' re too obvioushere from the highway."

We did aquick, thorough job, searching everything except body cavities. Weweren't needy enough to do that yet. Then, at Zahra'sinsistence, I did gobehindtheruinedhouseforaquickchangeof clothing. Shetookthe gunfrom Harryandstood watchforme.

"You're bloody," she said. "If people think you're wounded, they might jump you. Thisain't a good day to look like you got something wrong with you."

Isuspectedthatshewasright. Anyway, itwasapleasure to have her talkme into something I already wanted so much to do.

I put my filthy, wet clothes into a plastic bag, sealed it, and stuffed it into my pack. If any ofthe dead had ownedclothingthatwouldfitme, and that was still in wearable condition, I would have thrown mine away. As it was, I would keep them and wash them the next time we came to a water station or a store that permitted washing. We had collected money from the corpses, but it would be best to use that for necessities.

Wehadtakenabouttwenty-fivehundreddollarsin allfromthefourcorpses--alongwithtwoknivesthat we could sellorpasson to the two girls, and one gunpulled by aman Harryhadshot. The gunturned out to be an empty, dirty Beretta nine millimeter. Its owner had hadnoammunition, but we can buy that-- maybe from Bankole. For that we willspend money.

I had found a few piecesof jewelry in the pocket ofthemanwhoattackedme--twogoldrings, a necklaceof polishedbluestonesthatIthoughtwere lapislazuli, and a single earring which turned out to be a radio. The radiowe would keep. It could give us information about the worldb eyond the highway. It would be goodnot to be cut off any longer. I wondered who my attacker had robbed to get it. All four of the corpses had little plastic pill boxes hiddensomewhere on them. Two boxes contained a couple of pills each. The other two were empty. So thesepeoplewhocarriedneitherfoodnorwaternor adequateweaponsdidcarrypillswhentheycouldsteal themo rsteal enough to buy them. Junkies. What was their drugof choice, I wondered. Pyro? For the first time in days, I found myself thinkingof my brother Keith. Had he dealt in the round purple pills wekept finding on people who attacked us?Wasthatwhyhedied?

Afewmileslateralongthehighway, wesawsome copsincars, headingsouthtoward what must now be a burnedo ut hulk of a community with a lot of corpses. Perhaps the cops would arrest a few late-arrivingscavengers. Perhapstheywould scavengealittlethemselves. Orperhapstheywould just have a loo kanddrive away. What hadcopsdoneformycommunitywhenitwasburning? Nothing.

The two womenwe'ddug out of the rubble want to stay with us. AllisonandJillian Gilchrist are theirnames. They are sisters, 24 and 25 years old, poor, running a way from a life of prostitution. Their pimpwas their father. The house that had fallen on the mwas empty when they took shelter in it the night before.Itlookedlongabandoned.

"Abandoned buildingsare traps," Zahra told them as we walked. "Out here in the middle of nowhere, they'retargetsforallkindsofpeople."

"Nobody botheredus," Jill said. "But then the house fell on us, and nobody helpeduseither, until you guys came along."

"You're very fortunate," Bankole told her. He was still with us, and walkingnext to me. "People don't help each other muchout here."

"We know," Jill admitted. "We're grateful. Who are you guys, anyway?"

Harrygaveheranoddlittlesmile."Earthseed,"hesaid, and glanced at me. You have to watch out for Harry w hen he smiles that way.

"What's Earthseed?" Jill asked, right oncue. ShehadletHarrydirecthergazetome.

"We share someideas," I said. "We intend to settle up north, and foundacommunity."

"Whereupnorth?" Alliedemanded. Hermouthwasstill hurting, and I felt it more when I paid attention to her. Atleastherbleedinghadalmoststopped.

"We're looking for jobs that pay salaries and we're watching water prices," Isaid. "Wewant tosettlewhe rewaterisn'tsuchabigproblem."

"Water'saproblem everywhere," sheproclaimed. Then, "What are you? Somekindof cult orsomething?"

"We believe insome of the same things," Isaid.Sheturnedtostareatmewithwhatlookedlike hostility. "Ithink religion is dog shit," she announced.

"It's either phony or crazy."

I shrugged. "You can travel withusor youcanwalk away."

"Butwhatthehelldoyoustandfor?" shedemanded.

"What do youpray to?

"Ourselves," I said. "What elseisthere?"

She turnedaway in disgust, then turnedback. "Do we have to join yourcult if we travel with you?"

"No."

"Allrightthen!"Sheturnedherbackandwalked aheadofmeasthoughshe'dwonsomething.

I raised my voice just enough to startle andprojected it at the back of herhead. I said, "Werisked ourselv esfor you today."

She jumped, but refused to lookback.

I continued. "You don't owe us anything for that. It isn't something you could buy fromus. But if you travel withus, and there 'strouble, you stand by us, standwithus. Now will you do that or not?"

Allie swung around, stiff with anger. She stopped right in front of me and stood there.

I didn't stop or turn. It wasn't a time for giving way. I neededtoknowwhatherprideandangermight drive her to. How much of that apparent hostility ofherswasreal, and how much might be due to her pain? Was she going to be more trouble than she was worth?

Whenshe realized that I meant to walk overher if I had to, that I would do it, she slidaround me to walk beside measthough she had intended to do that all along.

"If you hadn't been the ones to digusout," she said,

"wewouldn'tbotherwithyouatall."Shedrewa deep,raggedbreath."Weknowhowtopullourown weight.Weca nhelpourfriendsandfightourenemies. We've beend oing that since we werekids."

I looked at her, thinking of the little that she and her sisterhad toldusabout their lives: prostitution, pimp father. . . . Hell of a story if it were true. Nodoubt thedetailswouldbeevenmoreinteresting. Howhadthey gotten away from their father, anyway? They would bear wat ching, but they might turnout to beworthso mething.

"Welcome." Isaid.

She stared at me, nodded, then walkedahead of meinlongquickstrides. Hersister, who haddropped to walk nearus while we were talking, no wwalked faster to join her. And Zah ra, who haddropped backtokeepaneye on the sister, grinned at meand shook her head. She went up to join Harry who was leadingthegroup.

Bankolecameupbesidemeagain, and Irealizedhe hadgotten outoftheway as soon as he sawtrouble between Allieandme.

"Onefightadayisenoughforme,"hesaidwhenhe sawmelookingathim.

Ismiled."Thankyouforstandingbyusbackthere." Heshrugged."Iwassurprisedtoseethatanyone elsecaredwh athappenedtoacoupleofstrangers."

"You cared."

"Yes. That kind of thingwill get me killed someday. If you don't mind, I'd like to travel with yourgroup, too."

"You have been. You'rewelcome."

"Thankyou,"hesaid,andsmiledbackatme.He hadcleareyeswithdeepbrownirises--attractiveeyes. I like him too much already. I'll have to be careful.

Late today we reached Salinas, a small city thatseemedlittletouchedbythequakeandits aftershocks. The groundhasbeenshudderingoffand on all day. Also, Salinas seeme duntouchedbythehordesofovereagerscav engersthatwehad beenseeingsincethatfirstburningcommunitythismorning. That was a surprise. Almost all of the smallercommunitieswe'dpassedhadbeenburningand swa rmingwith scavengers. It wasasthough thequa kehadgivenyesterday'squiet,ploddingpaupers permissiontogoanimalandpreyonanyonewho still lives in a house.

Isuspectedthatthebulkofthepredatory

scavengerswerestillbehindus,stillkillinganddyingand fighting ove rthe spoils. I've never workedashardatnot seeingwhatwasgoingonaroundmeas

I did today. The smoke and thenoise helped veil things from me. I had enough to do dealing withAllie's throbbingfaceandmouthandtheambientmisery of the highway.

We were tired when we reached Salinas, but wehaddecidedtowalkonafterresupplyingandwashing. We didn't want to be in tow nwhenthe worst of the scavengers arrived. They might be calm, tired after their day of burning and stealing, but I doubted it. Ithoughttheywouldbedrunkwithpowerandhungry formore. As Ban kolesaid, "Oncepeoplegetthe ideathatit'sallright-totakewhatyouwantanddestroy the rest, who knows when they'll sto p."Hegottheoldm andowntoapriceheseemedtothink was fair, thenh ecalled us over, "Any of youknowhowtohandleareliclike this?"heasked.Well, Harry and I did, and h ehaduslookthe rifle over. In the end, everyonehad a lookat it, some with obviousawkwardness and some with familiarity. Backinthen eighborhood, Harry and Ihad practiced with the gunso fother households--rifles and shot guns as well as hand guns. What ever was legal backhome was shared, at least in practices essions.

My father had wantedusto be familiar with whateverweaponsmight beavailable. Harry and I were both good, compete nt shots, but we'dnever bought a usedgun. I liked the rifle, I liked the look and feel of it, but that didn't mean much. Harry seemed to like it, too. Same problem.

"Comeoverhere,"Bankolesaid.Heherdedusoutof earshot of the old couple. "You shouldb uy that gun," he told us. "You tookenough money off those four junkies to pay the price I got that guy to agreeto. You needatleastoneaccurate,long-range weapon,andthisisagoodone."

"That money would buy a lot of food," Travis said. Bankole nodded. "Yes, but only living people need food. You buy this, and it will pay for itself the first time you need it. Anyone whodoesn't knowhow to use it, I'll teach. My father and I used to hunt deer with gunsjust like this."

"It's an antique," Harry said. "If it were automatic. . .

"

"If it were automatic, you couldn't afford it." Bankoleshrugged. "Thisthingischeapbecauseit'soldandit's legal."

"And it's slow," Zahrasaid. "And if you think that old guy'sprice is cheap, you're crazy."

"I know I'm new here," Allie said, "but I agreewithBankole. Youguysaregoodwithyourhandguns, but soo nero rlater, you're goingto meet someone whositsoutofhandgunrangeandpicksyouoff.Pi cksusoff."

"And this rifle is going to saveus?" Zahrademanded.

"I doubt that it would save us," I said. "But with a decent shot behind it, it might give us a chance." I looked at Bankole. "You hit any of those deer?" He smiled. "Oneortwo."

I did not return the smile. "Why don't you buy the rifleforyourself?"

"I can't afford it," he said. "I've got enoughmoney tokeepmegoingandtakecareofnecessitiesforawhile. Everything else that I had was stole nfrom meorburned.

I didn't quite believe him. But then, no one knewhow muchmoney I had either. In a way, I suppose hewa saskingaboutoursolvency. Didwehaveenough moneytospendanunexpected windfallon an oldrifle? And what did he intend tod oif we did? I hoped, not for the first time, that he wasn't just a handsomethief. Yet I did like the gun, and we doneedit.

"Harry and I are decent shots, too," I said to the group. "I like the feel of this gun, and it's the best wecan affordrightnow. Hasanyoneseen any real trouble withit?"

Theylookedatoneanother. Nooneanswered.

"Itjustneedsacleaningandsome30-06 ammunition,"Bankolesaid."It'sbeenstoredforawhile, but it appears to have bee nwell maintained. Ifyou buyit,IthinkIcanmanagetobuyacleaningkitand some ammunition."

At that, I spoke upbefore anyone elsecould. "If webuy, that 'sadeal. Who else can handle the rifle?"

"I can," Natividad said. And whenthat wonher a fewsurprisedlooks, shesmiled. "Ihadnobrothers. Myfather needed to tea ch someone."

"We neverhad a chance to doany shooting," Allie said. "But we can learn."

Jill nodded. "I always wanted to learn," shesaid.

"I'll have to learn, too," Travis admitted. "Where I grewup, guns were either lockedaway or carried by hiredguards."

"Let's gobuy it, then," I said. "And let's get out of here. The sunwill be down soon."

Bankolekepthisword, bought cleaning things and plenty of ammunition-- insiste don buying them before we left town, because, ashe said, "Whoknows when we'll need it, or when we'll find other people willing to sell it to us."

Once that wassettled, we left town.

As we left, Harry carried the new rifle and Zahra carried the Beretta, both empty and in need of attention before we loaded them. Only Bankole and I carriedfullyloadedguns.Iledthegroupandhebrought up the rear. It was getting dark. Behindusinthedistan ce, we could heargunfire and the dull thunder of small explosions.

20

Godisneithergoodnor evil,

neither lovingnorhating. GodisPower.

GodisChange.

We must find the rest of what we need within ourselves, inoneanother, in our Destiny.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

SATURDAY, AUGUST28, 2027

(from notes expanded TUESDAY, AUGUST 31)

Today or tomorrowshould be a rest day, but we've agreed not to rest. Last night was full of distantsho oting, explosions and fire. We could see fire behind us, though not in front. Moving on seems sensible, in spite of our weariness.

Then, this morning, I cleaned the little blackearringradiowithalcoholfrommypack, turned the thingon, and put it in my ear. I had to relay what it said sinceits sound could not reach the others.

What it said toldusweshould not only forget about resting, butchange our plans.

WehadintendedtofollowU.S.101upthroughSan FranciscoandacrosstheGoldenGateBridge.Butthe radi o warnedusto stay away from the Bay Area.FromSanJoseupthroughSanFrancisco,Oakland,and Berkeley, there is chaos.The quake hit hardup there, and the escavengers, predators, cops, and private armies of security guardsseem bent on destroying what'sleft. Also, ofcourse, pyro isdoingitspart.Thisfarnorth,thera dioreportersshorten the name to "pro"or"ro" and they say thereare plenty of addicts.

Addictsarerunningwild, setting fires in areasthat the earthquakedidn't damage. Bandsofthestreet poor precede orfollowthem, grabbing whatever they can from stores and from the walled enclaves of the richard what's left of the middle class. Yeah.

In some places, the rich are escaping by flying out in helicopters. The bridges that are still intact-- and most of them are--are guarded eitherby the policeorbygangs. Bothgroupsaretheretorobdesperate, fleeing people of their weapon s, money, food, and water-- at the least. The penalty for being too poor tobewo rthrobbingisabeating, arape, and/ordeath. The National Guardhasbeen activated to restore order, and I suppose it might. But I suspect that in the short term, it will only add to the chaos. Whatelse couldanothergroupofwell-armedpeopledoin suchaninsanesituation. The thoughtful one smight take their guns and other equipment and vanish to help their families. Others might find themselves at war with their ownpe ople. They'll be confused and scared and dangerous. Of course, some will discover that they enjoy their new powe r--the power to make others submit, the power to take what they want-- property, sex, life. ...

Bad situation. The Bay Areawill be a good place to avoid for along time.

Wespreadmapsontheground, studied them as weate breakfa st, and decided to turn off U.S. 101 this morning. We'llfollow as maller, no doubtemptier road in land to the little town of San Juan Bautista, then east along State Route 156. From 156 to 152 to Inter state 5. We'll use I-5 to circle around the Bay Area. For a time we'll walk up the center of the state instead of along the coast. We might have to bypass I-5 and go farther east to State 33 or 99. I like the emptiness around much of I-5. Cities are dangerous. Even small towns can be deadly. Yet we have to be able to resupply. In particular, we have to be able to get water. If that means going into the more populated areas around one of the other highways, we'll doit. Meanwhile we'll be careful, re supply every timewegetachance, neverpassupachancetotop off our water and food, wasten othing. But, hell, the mapsare old. Maybe the areaaround I-5ismoresettlednow.

ToreachI-5, we'llpassabigfreshwaterlake--San LuisReservoir. Itmightbedrynow. Overthepastfew years a lot of things ha dgonedry. But there willbetrees, coolshade, aplacetorestandbecomfortable. Perhaps there will at least be awater station. If so, we'll camp there and rest for aday or even two days. After hiking up and over a lot of hills, we'llneed the extrarest.

Fornow, Isuspect that we'll soon have scavengers being driven north toward us from Salinas, and refugees being driven south toward us from the Bayarea. The best thin gwe can do it get out of the way. We got an early start, fortified by the good food we had bought at Salinas--some extra stuff that Bankolehad wheeled in his cart, though we all chipped into buyit. We made sand wiches--dried beef, cheese, sliced to matoes--all on breadmade fromwheatflour. Andweategrapes. It was a shame we had to hurry. We hadn't had anything that good ta s ting for a long time.

ThehighwaynorthwasemptiertodaythanI'veever seenit. Wewerethebiggestcrowdaround--eight adultsandababy--andotherpeoplekeptawayfrom us. Several of the other walkers were individualsandcou pleswithchildren. Theyall seemedinahurry--asthoughthey, too, knewwhat mightbecoming behind them. Did they also know what might be ahead--what was a head if they stayed on 101. Before we left 101 I tried to warn a couple of women traveling alone with kids to avoid the Bay Area. I told them I'd heard there was a lot of trouble up the re--fires, riots, bad quaked amage. They just held onto their kids and edged away from me.

Then we left the 101 and tookour small, hilly road, our short cut to San JuanBautista. The roadwas paved andnot too badly brokenup. It was lonely. Forlongstretches we saw no one atall. No one had followed u sfrom 101. We passed farms, small communities, and shanties, and the people living in these came out with their gunstost area tus. But they let us alone. The short cut worked. We managed to reach and pass through San Juan Bautista before dark. We've camped just east of the town. We're all exhausted, footsore, full of aches and pains and blisters. I long for a rest day, but not yet. Not yet.

I put my sleepsack next to Bankole's and lay down, already halfasleep. We haddrawn straws for the watch schedule, and my wat ch wasn't until the early morning. Iatenuts and raisins, bread and cheese, and Isleptlike a corpse.

SUNDAY, AUGUST29, 2027

(from notes expanded TUESDAY, AUGUST 31)

Early this morning I awoke to the sound of gunfire, nearby and loud. Short bursts of automatic weapons fire. And there was light from somewhere.

"Be still," someonesaid. "Stay downand keep quiet." Zahra's voice. She had the watch just beforemine.

"What is it?" one of the Gilchristsdemanded. And then, "We've got to get away!"

"Stay!"I whispered. "Be still, and it will pass."

Icouldseenowthattwogroupswererunningfrom thehighway--the 156--one group chasing theorem, both firing their gunsasthough their enemies were the only people in the world. We could only stay down and hope they didn't shoot us by accident. If no body moved, accidents were less likely.

Thelightcamefromafireburningsomedistancefrom us. Not building s. Wehadn'tcamped near buildings. Yet something wasburning. It was, Idecided, abigtruck of somekind. Perhapsthat was there as on for the shooting. Someone, some group hadtriedtohijackatruckonthehighwayandthingshad gone wrong. Now, whateve rthe truck wascarrying-food, Isuspected--thefirewouldgetit. Neitherthehijackersnorthedefenderswouldwin. We would win if we could just keepout of the fighting.

I reached over to feel for Bankole, wanting assurance that he was all right.

He wasn't there.

Hissleepsackandhisthingswerestillthere, buthe wasgone.

Moving as little as I could, I looked toward our designated toiletarea. Hemust be there. I couldn't see him, but where else could he be? Bad timing. I squinted, trying to pick him out, not knowing whether to be glad or afraid because I couldn't. After all, if Icouldseehim, so could other people.

The shooting went on and on while we lay still andquietandscared. One of the trees we'd camped underwas hit twice, but well above our heads.

Thenthetruckexploded.Idon'tknowwhatexplodedin it. It hadn't looke dlikeanold truck--one of those that used diesel fuel, but it might have been. Would diesel fuel explode? I didn't know.

The explosionseemed to end the gunfight. A fewmoreshotswereexchanged, then nothing. Is awpeople, visible in the firelight, walking back toward the truck. Sometime later, Isaw others--several togetherinabunch--movingawaytowardthetown.Both groups were moving away fromu s, and thatwas good.

Now.WherewasBankole?InaslowavoiceasIcould manage, I spo ke to the others. "CananyoneseeBankole?"

Noanswer.

"Zahra,didyouseehimgo?"

"Yeah, a couple of minutesbefore the shooting started," she answered.

All right. If he didn't come out soon, we would have to go looking for him. I swallowed, tried not to think about finding him hurt ordead. "Is everyoneelse all right?" I asked. "Zahra?"

"I'm fine."

"Harry?"

"Yeah," he said. "I'm okay."

"Travis?Natividad?"

"We're all right," Travissaid.

"WhataboutDominic?"

"Didn't even wake up."

Thatwasgood. Ifhehad, hiscrying could have gotten u skilled. "Allie? Jill?"

"We're okay," Allie said.

Isatup,keepingmymovementsslowandcautious.I couldn't see anyone orhear anything beyo ndinsectsand thedistantfire.Whennooneshotme, otherssatuptoo.Wherenoiseandlighthadnot awakened Dominic, his mother'smovement did the trick. He awoke andbegan to whimper, but Natividadheldhimandhequieted.

But still no Bankole. I wanted toget up andgo looking for him. I had two mental images of him: One of him lying woundedordead, and one of himcrouchingbehindatreeholdinghisownBerettaninemillimeter. If the latter was true, I could scare him intoshootingme. Theremight also be other people out the rewith ready guns an dfrayed nerves.

"What time is it?" I asked Zahra who had Harry's watch.

"Three forty," she said.

"Let me have the gun," I said. "Your watchisalmost over anyway."

"What about Bankole?" She passed both thewatch and the gun over."

"If he isn't back in five minutes I'm goingto go lookforhim."

"Wait a minute," Harry said. "You aren't going to do that by yourself. I'll go with you."

I almost saidno. I don't think he wouldhave paid any attention if I had, but I never spoke the word. If Bankolewereinjuredandconscious,Iwouldbeuseless the moment I saw him. I would bel ucky todragmyself backtocamp.Someoneelsewould havetodraghimback.

"Thank you," I said to Harry.

Five minutes later, he and I went first to the toiletarea, thenaroundit, searching. Therewas no one, or rather, we could see no one. Still, there might be other people around--others camping overnight, others involved in the shooting, others prowling. . . . Still, I called Bankole's name once, aloud. I touched Harry as a kind of warning and he jumped, settled, then jumpe dagain as I said thename. We both listened in absolute silence.

Therewasarustlingofftoourrightwheretherewere several tre es blotting out the stars, creating aspaceofimp enetrabledarkness. Anything could be there.

Therustlingcameagain, and with ita whimper -- a child's whimper. Then Bankole's voice:

"Olamina!"

"Yes,"Ianswered, almost limp with relief." Here!" Hecameout of the pool of darkness, at all, broads had owt hat see medbulkier than it should have been. He was carrying something.

"I have an orphanedchild," he said. "The mother was hit by a stray bullet. She just died."

Isighed."Isthechildhurt?"

"No, justscared. I'llcarryhimbacktoourcamp. Will oneofyougethisthings?"

"Take usto hiscamp," Isaid.

Harry collected thechild sthings, and I collected themother sandsearched herbody. Betweenus, we gathered everything. By the time we finished, thelittleboy,perhapsthreeyearsold,wascrying. Thatscare d me. I left Harry to push thedead woman's packalonginherbabycarriageandBankoletocarry thewhimperingchild. AllIcarriedwasthegun, drawnandready. Evenwhenwegotbacktoourow ncamp, I couldn't relax. The little boy wouldn't bequiet and Dominicjoined him with even loudercries. Zahra an dJill worked to comfort the new child, buthewas surrounded by strangers in the middle of the night, and he wanted his mother!

Isawmovementoverneartheburnedoutcarcassofthe truck. The fire wa sstill burning, but it was smaller now, burning itself out. There were still peoplenearit. They had lost their truck. Would they care about a cryingchild? And if they did care, would they want to help the kidorjust shut its mouth.

A lone, dark figurecame away from the truck andtookseveralstepstowardus. Atthatmoment, Natividad tookthenewchild, and inspite of hisage, gavehimone breast and Dominic theother.

It worked. Bothchildrenwerecomforted almostatonce. Theymadea few more small sounds, then settled down tonursing.

The shadow figure from the truck stood still, perhaps confused now that it was no longer guided by noise.

After a moment, it turned andwent back past the truck andout of sight. Gone. It couldn't have seenus. We could look out of the darkness under the trees that sheltered our camp site and see by firelight, by starlight. But others could only follow the baby noise to us.

"We ought to move," Allie whispered. "Even if they can't seeus, they knowwe'rehere."

"Watchwith me," Isaid.

"What?"

"Stay awake and watch with me. Let the others get a little more rest. Trying to move in the darkismore dangerousthanstayingput."

"...all right. But I don't have a gun."

"Doyouhaveaknife?"

"Yeah."

"That will have to be enoughuntil we get the othergunscleanandready."We'vebeentootiredandintoo much of a hurry to do that so far. Also, I don't want Allie or Jill to have guns yet. Not yet ."Just keepyour eyesopen." The only real defense againstautomaticriflesisconcealmentandsilence.

"A knife is better than agun now," Zahra said. "If you have to use it, it will be quiet."

I nodded. "The rest of you, try to get a little more rest. I'll wake you at dawn."

Most of them lay down to sleep, or at least to rest. Natividad kept both children withher. Tomorrow, though, one ofuswould have to take chargeof the little boy. We didn't need theburden of such a bigchild --onewhohadreachedthe"runaroundandgrab eve rything" stage. But we had the little boy, and there wasn oone to hand him off to. No womancampingalongsideahighwaywithherchildwould haveotherrelativesh andy.

"Olamina," Bankole said into my ear. His voicewas low andsoft and only I reacted to it. I turned, and he was soclose that I felt his beardbrush my face. Soft, thickbeard. This morning hecombedit more carefully than hecombed the hair on his head. He has the only mirror among us. Vain, vain old man. I moved almost by reflex toward him.

Ikissedhim, wondering what it would feellike tokiss somuch beard. Ididkiss the beard at first, missing his mouth by a little in the dark. Then I found it and hemoved a little and slipped his arms around meand we settled to it for a little while.

It washard for me to makemyself pushhim away. I didn't want to. He didn't want to let me.

"Iwasgoingtosaythankyouforcomingafterme," hesaid. "Thatwomanwasconsciousalmostuntil shedied. The onlythingIcoulddoforherwasstaywith her."

"I was afraidyou might have been shot out there."

"IwasflatonthegrounduntilIheardthewoman groaning."

I sighed. "Yeah." And then, "Rest."

Helaydownnexttomeandrubbedmyarm--whichtingled wherever he tou ched it. "We should talksoon,"he said.

"At least," I agreed.

Hegrinned--Icouldseetheflashofteeth--and turnedoverandtriedtosleep.

Theboy'snamewasJustinRohr.Hisdeadmother hadbeenSandraRohr.Justinhadbeenbornin Riverside, Californiajustthreeyearsago.Hismotherhad gotten him thi sfar north from Riverside. She had saved his birth certificate, some baby pictures, and apicture of a stocky, freckled, red-haired man who was, according to a notation on the back of the photo, Richard Walter Rohr, born January 9, 2002, and died May 20, 2026. The boy's father--only twenty-four when he died. I wondered what had killed him. Sandra Rohrhad saved hermarriage certificate and other papers important to her. All were wrapped in a plastic packet that I had taken from her body. Elsewhere on her, I had found several thousand dollars and a goldring.

Therewasnothingaboutrelativesoraspecificdestin ation. It seemed that Sandra had simply beenheadingno rthwithhersoninsearchofabetterlife. The little boy toleratedu sall well enoughtoday, althoughhegot frustrated whenwe didn'tunderstandhimatonce. Whenhecried, he demandedthatweproducehismother.

"Thenhe's more than three hundred miles behind you."

"...yeah."

"He drank a lot, didn't he."

"All the time."

"Thenhe'dbeinnoshapetofollowyouevenifthefire never touched him. Whatd oyou think wouldhappentoadr unkonthehighway?He'dneverevenmake it out of L.A."

She nodded. "You sound like Allie. You'reboth right. Iknow. But. . .Idream about himsometimes-- that he's foundus. ... I know it'scrazy. But I wakeup covered insweat."

"Yeah," I said, remembering my own nightmares during the search for my father. "Yeah."

JillandIwalkedtogetherforawhilewithouttalking. WeweremovingslowlybecauseJustindemanded tobeallow edtowalknowandthen. Hehadtoo muchenergytospendhourssittingandriding. And, ofcourse, whenhewasallo wedtowalk, hewantedto run all around, investigate everythin g. I had time to stop, swing my pack around, and dig out a length of closeline. I handed it to Jill.

"Tell yoursister to try harnessing him with this," I said. "It might save his life. One end around his waist, the other around herarm. "She took the rope.

"I've taken care of a few three-year-olds," I said,

"and I'll tell you, she'sgoing to need a lot of help with that little kid. If she doesn't know that now, she will."

"Are you guys just going to leave all the work toher?" Jill demanded.

"Of coursenot." I watched Allie and Justin walking along--lean, angular woman and pudgy, bumble beeof a child. The boy ran to investigate ab ush near the roadside, then, startled by the approach of strangers,ranbacktoAllieandhungontotheclothof her jeans until she too khis hand. "They do seem to be adoptingeach other, though," I said. "Andtakingcareofotherpeoplecanbeagoodcurefor nightmareslikeyou rsandmaybehers."

"You sound as though you know." I nodded. "I live in this world, too."

We passed through Hollisterbeforenoon. Weresupplied there, not knowing when we would see well-equi ppedstores again. We had already discovered that several of the small communities shown on the maps no longe rexisted--hadnot existedforyears. Theearthquakehaddonealotof damageinHollister, butthepeoplehadn't gon eanimal. They seeme dto be helpingone another withrepairs and looking after their own destitute. Imaginethat.

21

The Self must create

Itsownreasonsforbeing. ToshapeGod,

Shape Self.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

MONDAY, AUGUST 30, 2027

There is still a little water in the San Luis Reservoir. It'smore freshwater than I've everseen in one place, but by the vast size of the reservoir, I cansee that it's only a little compared to whatshould bethere--what used to be there.

The highwayruns through the recreational area for several miles. That gave us a chance to travel throughouther oad until we spotted an area that would make a good rest-day campand that wasn't occupied.

There are a lot of people in the area--people who have set up permanent camps in everything from a -and-plastic tents to wooden shacks that look almost fit for human habitation. Where are so many people going to the bathroom? How cleanist he water in the reservoir? No doubt cities that use it purifythewaterwhenitreachesthem. Whethertheydo or not, I thin kit'stime for usto breakout thewaterp urificationtablets.

Aroundseveralofthetentsandshacks, there are small, raggedgardens--newplantingsandremnants of summer vegetablegardens. There are a few things left to harvest: big squ ashes, pumpkins, and gourds still growing all ong with carrots, peppers, greens, and a little corn. Good, cheap, filling foods. Note noughprotein, but perhaps the people hunt. The remust begame around here, and I saw plenty of guns. People wearholstered hand guns or carry rifles or shot guns. The meninparticular goarmed. They all stared at us.

Aswewentpast,peoplestoppedtheirgardening,outdoor cooking, or whatever to sta re atus. We had pushed ourselves, had beeneager to arrive ahead of the crowd I believe willsooncomein from the Bay Area. So we didn't arrivewith the usual human river. Yetbyourselvesweareenoughofacrowdtomakethe loca lsquattersnervous. They let us alone, though. Except during disaster-induced feedingfrenziesliketheonesaftertheearthquake,most peopleletoneanotheral one. IthinkDominicand Justin are making it easier for usto fit in. Justin, now tethered to Allie's wrist, runs around staring at the squattersuntil they make him nervous. ThenherunsbacktoAllieanddemandstobe carried. He'sacutelittle kid. Lean, grim-faced people tend to smile at him.

Nooneshotatusorchallengedusaswewalked

along the highway. No onebothereduslater when we left the highway and headed into the trees toward w hat we thought might be a good area. We found old campsites and to ilet places and avoided them. We didn't want to be within sight of the highway or of anyone else 's tentor shack. We wante dprivacy, not too many rocks to sleepon, and a way of reaching the water that didn't put us too muchon display. We looked for over an houruntilwefoundanisolatedoldcampsite,longabandoned and alittlehigherupslopethanotherswe'd seen. It suited all of us. Then, with hoursof daylight left, were stedine normous comfort and laziness, knowing we had the rest of to day and all of tomorrow to do almostnothing. Natividadfed Dominicand the two of them drifted off to sleep. Allie followed he rexample with Justin, although preparing himameal was a little more complicated. Both women had more reason to be tired and to need sleep than the restofus, so we left them out when we drewlots for a watch schedule -- one for day and night. We shouldn't getto ocomfortable. Also, we agreed that no one should go off exploring or getting water alone. I thought the couples would soon start going off together -- and I thought it was just about time for Bankole and me to have that talk.

Isatwithhimandcleanedournewhandgunwhile

hecleanedtherifle.Harrywasonwatchandneeded

my gun. When I went over to give it to him, he let meknowheunderstoodexactlywhatwasgoingon betwe enBankoleandme.

"Be careful," hewhispered. "Don't give the poor old guy a heart attack."

"And why should peoplebotherabout the Destiny, farfetchedas it is? What's in it for them?"

"A unifying, purposeful life here on Earth, and thehopeofheavenforthemselvesandtheirchildren. Areal he aven, not mythology or phil osophy. A heaven that will be theirs to shape."

"Orahell,"hesaid. Hismouthtwitched. "Human beingsaregoodatcreatinghellsforthemselveseven out of richne ss." He thought for a moment. "It soundstoosimple, youknow."

"Youthinkit'ssimple?" Iaskedinsurprise.

"I said itsound stoo simple."

"It sounds overwhelmingto somepeople."

"I mean it's too. . .straightforward. If you get people to accept it, they'll makeit more complicated, more open to interpretation, more mystical, and more comforting."

"Not around me they won't!" I said.

"With you or without you, they will. All religions change. Think about the big ones. What do you think Christwouldbethesedays? ABaptist? A

Methodist?ACatholic?AndtheBuddha--doyou thinkhe'dbeaBuddhistnow?Whatkindof

Buddhism would hepractice?" He smiled. "After all,if GodisChange, surelyEarthseedcanchange, and if it lasts, it will."

Ilookedawayfromhimbecausehewassmiling. This was all nothing to him. "I know," I said. "Noo necanstop Change, butweallshapeChangewhetherwe mea nto or not. I mean to guide and shape Earthseed into what it shouldbe."

"Perhaps." He went on smiling. "Howseriousare you about this?"

The questiondrove me deep into myself. I spoke, almost not knowingwhat I wouldsay. "When my father. . .disappeared," I began, "it was Earthseed that kept me going. Whenmost of my community and the rest of my family were wiped out, and I was alone, I still had Earthseed. What I am now, all that I am nowis Earthseed."

"Whatyouarenow,"hesaidafteralongsilence,"isa very unusual youn gwoman."

We didn't talk for a while after that. I wonderedwhat he thought. Hehadn't seemedto be bottling uptoo much hilarity. No more than I'd expected. Hehadbeenwillingtogoalongwithhiswife's religious needs. Now, hewould at least permit memine.

Iwonderedabouthiswife. Hehadn'tmentionedher before. Whathadshebeenlike? Howhadshedied?

"Did you leave home because yourwife died?" I asked.

Heputdownalongslendercleaningrodandrestedhis back again st the treebehind him. "My wife died five years ago," he said. "Three menbroke in-- junkies, dealers, I don't know. They beat her, tried tomakeher tellwherethedrugswere."

"Drugs?"

"They had decidedthat we must have something they coulduseorsell. They didn't like the thingsshe was able to give them so they kept beatingher. She had a heart problem." He drewin a longbreath, then sighed. "She was still alive when I got home. Shewasabletotellmewhathadhappened. Itriedto helpher, but thebastardshadtakenhermedicine, taken eve rything. I phoned for an ambulance. Itarrivedanhouraftershedi ed. Itriedtosaveher, then to revive her. I tried sod amnedhard. . . . "

I stared down the hill from our campwhere just aglintofwaterwas visible in the distance through the trees and bushes. The world is full of painful stories. Sometimes it seems as though the rearen't any other kind and yet I found myself thinkingh ow beautiful that glint of water was through the trees.

"IshouldhaveheadednorthwhenSharondied,"Bankole sai d. "I thought about it."

"But you stayed." Iturned away from the water and looked at him. "Why?"

Heshookhishead."Ididn'tknowwhattodo,soforsome time I didn't doa nything. Friends tookcare ofme,coo kedforme,cleanedthehouse.Itsurprisedme that they would do that. Church people most of them. Neigh bors. More her friends than min e."

I thought of Wardell Parrish, devastated after thelossofhissisterandherchildren--andhishouse. HadBankol ebeensomecommunity's Wardell Parrish?" Didyouliveinawalledcommunity?" I asked.

"Yes. Not rich, though. Nowhere near rich. Peoplemanagedtoholdontotheirpropertyandfeedtheirfamilies. Not much else. N oservants. No hired guards."

"Soundslikemyoldneighborhood."

"Isupposeitsoundslikealotofoldneighborhoodsthat aren't there any more. I stayed to help the peoplewhoh adhelpedme.Icouldn'twalkawayfrom them."

"But you did. You left. Why?"

"Fire--andscavengers."

"You too? Your wholecommunity?"

"Yes.Thehousesburned,mostofthepeoplewere killed. . . . The restscattered, went to family orfriends elsewhere.Scavengersandsquattersmovedin. I didn't decide to leave. I escaped."

Much too familiar. "Where did you live? What city?"

"SanDiego."

"Thatfarsouth?"

"Yes. As I said, I shouldhave left years ago. If I had, I could have managed plane far eand resettlement money."

Planefarean dresettlement money? He might not call that rich, but we would have.

"Where are you goingnow?" I asked.

"North."Heshrugged.

"Justanywherenorthorsomewhereinparticular"

"AnywherewhereIcanbepaidformyservicesand allowedtoliveamongpeoplewhoaren'touttokillme for my food or water."

Orfordrugs, Ithought. Ilooked into his bearded face and added up the hints I'd picked up to day and over the past few days. "You're adoctor, aren't you?"

He looked a little surprised. "I was, yes. Familypractice. Itseems along time ago."

"People will alwaysneed doctors," I said. "You'll do all right."

"My mother used to say that." He gave me a wry smile. "But here I am."

Ismiledbackbecause,lookingathimnow,Icouldn't helpmyself,butashespoke,Idecidedhehadtoldme at least one lie. He might bea sdisplaced and indistressasheappearedtobe,buthewasn't just wanderingnorth.He wasn'tlookingforjust

anywherehecouldbepaidforhisservicesandnot robbedormurdered. Hewasn't the kindofman who wandered. Heknew where hewas going. He had a haven somewhere-are lative's home, another home of his own, a friend's home, something-some definite destination.

Orperhapshejusthadenoughmoneytobuya placeforhimselfinWashingtonorCanadaorAlaska. He had had to choose betwee nfast, safe, expensive air travel and having settling-inmoneywhenhegotwherehewasgoi ng.Hehadchosensettling-i nmoney. If so, I agreedwith him. He wastakingthekindofriskthatwouldenablehim tomake anewbeginningassoonaspossible--ifhe survived.

On the otherhand, if I were right about any of this, he might disappearonme some night. Orperhapshewo uldbemoreopenaboutit--justwalkawayfrom me some day, turn down aside roadand wave good-bye. I didn't want that. After I'd slept with him Iwouldwantitevenless.

Even now, I wanted to keep himwith me. I hatedthathewaslyingtomealready--orIbelievedhe was.Butwhyshouldhetellmeeverything?Hedidn'tkno wme very well yet, and like me, he meant to survive. PerhapsI couldconvince him that he and Icouldsurvivewelltogether.Meanwhile,besttoenjoyhim without quite tru sting him. I may be wrongabout all this, but I don't believe I am. Pity.

We finished the guns, loaded them, and went down to the water to wash. Youcould go right down to the water, scoop some up in apot, and take it away. Itwasfree.Ikeptlookingaround,thinkingsomeone would cometostopusorchargeusorsomething.I supposewecouldhavebeenrobbed,butnoone paidanyattentiontous. Wesawotherpeople gettingwaterinbottles,canteens,pots,andbags, buttheplaceseemedpeaceful.Nooneboth eredanyone. No one paid any attention to us.

"A place like this can't last," I told Bankole. "It's ashame. Life could be good here."

"I suspect that it's against the law to live here," hesaid. "This is a State Recreation Area. The reshould be some kind of limit on how longyou canstay. I'm certain that the reshould be -- used to be -- some grouppolicing the place. I wonder if officials of some kind come around to collect bribes now and then."

"Notwhilewe'rehere, Ihope." Idriedmyhandsandarm sandwaited for him todry his. "Are youhungry?" Iaske d.

I didn't laugh, though I wanted to. I just lookedat him.

Afterawhilehefrownedandshookhishead. Inalittle more time, he moved backagain st me, touching my face, my shoulders, my breasts.

"You'renot just eighteen," he said. Ishrugged.

"Whenwereyouborn?Whatyear?"

"Twenty oh nine."

"No." He drew theword out: "Nooo."

Ikissedhimandsaidinthesametone,"Yesss.Nowstop yournonsense. You want to be with me and I want to be with you. We'ren ot going to split up because of my age, are we?"

Afterawhileheshookhishead."Youshouldhaveanice youngster like Travis," h esaid. "I should have the sens e and the strength to send you off to find one."

That made me think of Curtis, and I cringed away from thinking of him. I've thought as little as possible about CurtisTalcott. He isn't like my brothers. Hemaybedead, butnoneofuseversawhisbody. I sawhisbroth erMichael. IwasterrifiedofseeingCurti shimself, but I never did. He may not be dead. He'slost to me, but I hope he's not dead. Heshould be here with me on theroad. I hopehe'salive andallright.

"WhohaveIremindedyouof?"Bankoleaskedme, hisvoicesoftanddeep.

I shook my head. "A boy I knew at home. We were going to get married this year. I don't even know whether he's still alive."

"You loved him?"

TUESDAY, AUGUST 31, 2027

I've spent all of today talking, writing, reading, and makinglove to Bankole. It seemssuch a luxury not to have to get up, pack, and walkall day. We all laysprawledaroundthecampsiterestingachingmuscles, eating, andd oing nothing. More peopleflowedintotheareafromthehighwayandmade theircamps, butnone of thembotheredus.

IbeganZahra's readingless on and Jilland Allielooked interested. I included them as though I had intended to from the first. It turned out that they could read a little, but hadn't learned to write. Toward the end of the less on, Iread a few Earthseed verse sto them in spite of Harry's groans.

Yet when Allie proclaimed that she would neverpraytoanygodofchange, Harrywastheonewho correctedh er. Zahraand Travisbothsmiledatthat, and Ban kole watchedusall with apparent interest. After that, Allie began to askquestions instead of makings cornful proclamations, and for the most part, theothers answeredher--Travisand Natividad, Harry and Zah ra. Once Bankole answered, expanding on something I told him yesterday. Then he caught himself and looked a little embarrassed.

"I still think it's too simple," he said to me. "A lot of it is logical, but it will never work without a sprinkling of mystical confusion."

"I'll leave that to my descendants," I said, andhebusiedhimself,diggingabagofalmondsoutofhis pack,pou ringsomeintohishand,andpassingthe restaround.

Justbeforenightfallagunbattlebeganovertowardthe highway. We couldn't see any of it from whe re we were, but we stopped talking and lay down. With bullets flying, it seemedbest to keep low.

The shooting started and stopped, moved away, then came back. I was on watch, so I had to stay alert, but in this storm of noise, nothing moved near us except the trees in the evening breeze. It looked so peaceful, and yet people out there were trying to kill each other, and no doubt succeeding. Strangehownormalit's be come for us to lie on the ground and listen while near by, people try to kill each other.

22

Aswind, A swater, Asfire, As life, God

Is both creative anddestructive, Demandingandyielding, Sculptorandclay.

God isInfinite Potential:GodisChange.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER9, 2027

We've had over a week of weary, frightening, nervewrackingwalking. We'vereached and passed through the city of Sacramento without real trouble. We've been able to buyen oughfood and water, been able to find plenty of empty place sin the hills where we could make camp. Yet none of ushave had any feelings of comfortorwell-being along the stretch of Interstate-5 that we've just traveled.

I-5 is much less traveled than U.S. 101, in spite of the earthquake chaos. There were times when the only people we could see were each other. Those times never lasted long, but they did happen.

Ontheotherhand, therewere more trucks on I-5. We had to be careful be cause trucks traveled during the day as well a sat night. Also, there were more human bones on I-5. It was nothing to run a cross skulls, lower jaws, or bon es of the pelvis and torso. Armandle gbones were rarer, but now and then, we spotted them too.

"I think it's the trucks," Bankole toldus. "If they hitsomeonealonghere,theywouldn'tstop. They wouldn't dare. Andthejunkiesandalcoholicswouldn't be that careful where they wal ked."

Isupposehe's right, although along that whole empty stretch of road, we saw only four people whom I believed were eithernot soberornot sane. Butwesawotherthings. On Tuesdaywecampedin alittle hollowbackinthehillstothewestoftheroad, andabigblackandwhitedogcamewandering downtowardourcampwiththefresh-looking, bloody handandforearmofachildinitsmouth.

Thedogspottedus, froze, turned, andranback theway it had com e. But we all got a good look before it went, andwe all saw the same thing. That night, we posted a double watch. Two watchers, two guns, no unnece ssary conversation, no sex.

Thenextdaywedecidednottotakeanotherrestday until we hadp assedthrough Sacramento. Therewasnogu aranteethatanythingwouldbebetteronthe other side of Sacrame nto, but we wanted to get away from this grim land.

That night, looking for a place to camp, westumbled across fourragged, filthy kids huddledaround a campfire. The picture of themisstill clear in my mind. Kids the age of my brothers--twelve, thirteen, maybe fourteen years old, three boys and agirl. The girlwas pregnant, and so huge it was obvious she wouldbegivingbirthanyday. Weroundedabendin adrystreambed, and therethesekidswere, roasting as evered humanleg, maneuvering it where it lay in the middle of their fire atop the burning wood by twisting its foot. As we wat ched, the girl pulled as liver of charred flesh from the thigh and stuffed it into her mouth.

Theyneversawus.Iwasinthelead,andIstoppedthe others befo re they all rounded thebend. HarryandZah ra,whowerejustbehindme,sawallthatIsaw. We turne dthe othersback and away, nottellingthemwhyuntilwe werefarfromthosekids andtheircannibalfeast.

Nooneattackedus.Noonebotheredusatall.The countrywewalkedthroughwasevenbeautifulin someplaces-greentreesandrollinghills;goldendriedg rassesand tiny communities; farms, manyovergrownandabandoned, andabandonedhouses.Nice country, and compa red to Southern California, richcountry. More water, mo re food, more room. . . . Sowhywerethepeopleeatingoneanother?

Therewereseveralburnedoutbuildings. It was obvious that the re had been troublehere too, but much less than on the coast. Yet we couldn't wait togetbacktothe coast.

Sacramentowasallrighttoresupplyinandhurry through. Waterandfoodwerecheaptherecompared to what you couldb uy along the roadside, ofcourse. Citieswere alwaysa relief asfar aspriceswent.Butcitieswerealsodangerous.Moregangs, moreco ps,moresuspicious,nervouspeoplewith guns.Youtiptoethroughcities.Youkeepupasteady pace, keep you r eyes open, and try to look both too intimidating to bother and invisible. Neat trick.Bankolesayscitieshavebeenlikethatforalong time.

Speaking of Bankole, I haven't let him get muchrest on this rest day. He doesn't seem to mind. He did say something that I should make note of, though. Hesaidhewantedmetoleavethegroupwithhim. Hehas, as Is uspected, as a fehaven--orassafe as any haven can be that isn't surrounded by high-tech security devices and armed guards. It's in the hillsonthecoastnear Cape Mendocinomay betwo weeks from here.

"My sister andher family have been living there," hesaid. "Buttheproperty belongstome. There's roomon it for you."

Icouldimaginehowdelightedhissisterwouldbeto seeme. Wouldshetrytobepolite, orwouldshestare at me, then at him, then demand to know whetherhewasinhisrightmind?

"DidyouhearwhatIsaid?"hedemanded.

I looked at him, interested in theanger I heard in his voice. Why anger?

"What am I doing? Boring you?" he demanded.

I took his hand andkissedit. "You introduce me toyoursisterandshe'llmeasureyouforastraitjacket." After a while, he laughed. "Yes." And then, "I don't care."

"Whatdoesshedoforaliving?Farmtheland?"

"Yes, and her husband does oddjobs for cash-- whichisdangerousbecauseitleavesherandthe childrenalonefordays, weeks, evenmonth satatime. If we can manage to sup port ourselves without becoming a drain on her few resources, we might be useful to her. We might give her more security."

"Howmanykids?"

"Three. Let'ssee. . . eleven, thirteen, and fifteen years old by now. She's only forty herself." His mouth twitched. Only. Yeah. Even his little sisterwas old enough to be my mother. "Her name's Alex. Alexandra. Married to Don Casey. They both hate cities. They thought my land was a godsend. Theycou ldraisechildrenwhomightlivetogrowup."Henodded. "And their children have done all right."

"Howhave you kept in touch?" I asked. "Phone?"

"That was part of our agreement," he said. "They don't have a phone, but when Don goes to one ofthe townstogetwork,hephonesmeandletsme knowhoweveryoneis.Hewon'tknowwhat'shappened to me. He won 't be expecting me. If he'striedtophone,bothheandAlexwillbeworried."

"You should have flown up," I said. "But I'm glad you didn't."

"Are you? So am I. Listen, you are comingwith me. I can't think of anything I wantasmuch as I want you. I haven't wantedanything at all for a long time. Too long."

Ileanedbackagainstatree.Ourcampsitewasn'tas

completelyprivateastheoneatSanLuishadbeen,but there were trees, and the couple scouldgetawayfrome achother.Eachcouplehadonegun, andtheGilchristsisterswerebaby-sittingDominic as well as Justin. We had put them in the middle of a rough triangle and given them my gun. On I-5 they and Travis hadhad a chance to do a little target practice. It was all of our duty to lookaround nowandthen andmakes ure no strangers wandered into the area. I looked around.

SittingupIcouldseeJustinrunningaround, chasing pigeons. Jillwaskeepinganeyeonhim, butnottrying to keepu pwith him.

Bankole took me by the shoulders and turnedme to face him. "I'm not boring you, am I?" He asked for t hesecondtime.

I had been tryingnot to look at him. I lookednow, but he had not yet saidwhat hehad to say if hewanted tokeepmewithhim.Didheknow?Ithought hedid.

"I want to go with you," I said. "But I'm seriousabout Earthseed. I couldn't be more serious. You have to understand that." Why did this sound strange to me? It was the absolute truth, but I felt odd telling it.

"I know my rival," he said.

Maybethat'swhyitsoundedstrange. Iwastelling himtherewassomeoneelse--somethingelse. Maybe it wouldh ave sounded less strange if the somethingwe reanotherman.

"You could help me," I said.

"Help you what? Do you have any real ideawhat you want to do?"

"Begin the first Earthseed Community." Hesighed.

"You could help me," I repeated. "This worldis falling apart. You couldhelp me begin something purpo seful and constructive."

"Going to fix the world, are you?" he said with quiet amusement.

I looked at him. For amoment I was too angry to let myself speak. When I could control my voice, I said,

"It's all right if you don't believe, but don't laugh. Do you knowwhat it means to havesomething tobelieve in?Don'tlaugh."

After a while he said, "All right."

After a longerwhile, I said, "Fixing the world isnot what Earthseed is about."

"The stars. I know." He lay flat on his back, butturnedhisheadtolookatmeinsteadoflookingup.

"Thisworldwouldbeabetterplaceifpeoplelivedaccording to Earth seed," I said. "But then, this worldwould bebetterifpeoplelivedaccordingtotheteachings of alm ost any religion."

"That'strue. Whydoyouthinkthey'llliveaccording to the teaching of yours?"

"A few will. Several thousand? Several hundred thousand? Millions? I don't know. But when I have a home base, I'll begin the first community. In fact, I've already begun it."

"Is that what you need me for?" He didn't bother tosmile or pretend it was joke. It wasn't. I moved over closerto him andsat next to him so that I could lookdown into hisface.

"I need you to understand me," I said. "I need you to take me the way I am or go off to your land by yourself."

"You need me to take you and all your friends off the street so you can start a church." Again, he was altogetherserious.

"That or nothing," I said with equal seriousness. He gave me a humorless smile. "So now we knowwhere westand."

Ismoothedhisbeard, and saw that he wanted to move away from my hand, but that he did not move.

"Are you all that sure youwant God as yourrival?" I asked.

"I don't seem to have much choice, do I?" Hecoveredmycaressinghandwithoneofhisown.

"Tell me, do you ever lose your temper and screamandcry?"

"Sure."

"I can't picture it. In all honesty, I can't."

And that reminded me of something that I hadn't told him, had better tell him before he found out and felt cheatedordecidedthatIdidn'ttrusthim--whichIstill didn't, quite. But I didn't want to lose him to stupidity or cowardice. I didn't want to lose him at all.

"Still want me with you?" I asked.

"Oh, yes," he said. "I intend to marry you oncewe'vesettled."

23

Yourteachers

Areallaroundyou. All that you perceive,

All that you experience, All that is given to youortakenfromyou,

All that you love or hate, need or fear

Will teach youN If you will learn. God isyour first and your last teacher.

Godisyourharshestteacher:

subtle, demanding. Learnordie.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2027

Wehadanotherbattletotrytosleepthroughbeforedawn this morning. It began to the south of uso ut on or ne ar the highway, andworkedits way first toward, then away from us.

We could hear people shooting, screaming, cursing, running.... Same oldstuff--tiresome, dangerous, and stupid. The shooting went on for over anhour, waxing and waning. There was a final barrage that seemed to involve more gunsthan ever. Then the noise stopped.

I managed to sleep through someof it. I gotover being afraid, even got overbeing angry. In the end, I was only tired. I thought, if the bastards are going to kill me, I can't stopthem by staying awake. If that wasn't altogether true, I didn't care. I slept.

And somehow, during or after the battle, inspite of the watch, two peoples lipped into our campand be ddeddown amongus. They slept too.

Weawoke early asusualso that we could startwalking while the heatwasn't too terrible. We've learned to wakeu pwithout prompting at the first light of dawn. Today, four of us sat up in our bags at almost the same time. I was crawling out of my bag to go off and urinate when I spotted the extra people--twograylumpsinthedawnlight, one large and one small, lying against each other, as leep on thebareground. Thinarms and legs extended like sticks from rags and mounds of clothing.

Iglancedaroundattheothersandsawthatthey werestaringwhereIwasstaring--allofthemexceptJill, wh owas supposed to be on watch. We begantrustinghertostandnightwatchlastweekwithapartne r. This was only hersecondsolitary watch. Andwherewasshelooking? Awayintothetrees. SheandIwouldhavetotalk.

Harry and Travis were already reacting to the figuresontheground. Insilence, each manwaspeelingout of his baginhisunderwear, and standingup. More fully clothed, I matched them, move for move, and the three of used osedinaround the two intruders. The larger of the two a woke all at once, jumpedup, darted two or three ste ps toward Harry, then stopped. It was a woman. We could see her betternow. She was brown-skinned with a lot of long, straight, unkept black hair. Her coloring was as dark as mine, but she was all plains and angles -- a wiry, hawk-faced woman who could have used a few decent meals and a good scrubbing. She looked like a lot of people we've seen on the road.

Thesecondintruderawoke, saw Travisstanding nearby inhisunderwear, and screamed. That got everyone's attention. It was the high, piercing shriek of a child-- a little girl who looked about seven. She was atiny, pinched image of the woman--her mother, or her sister perhaps.

I could see that. "Just take what we give you and nothing more thanwe give you," I said. "That will be pay enough."

"We won't steal. We aren't thieves."

Of course they were thieves. How else could they live. Some stealing and scavenging, maybesome whor ing. . . . They weren't very good at it or they'd lookbetter. But for the littlekid'ssake, I wanted to help them at least with a meal.

"Wait, then." I said. "We'll put a meal together." They sat where they were and watched uswithhungry, hungryeyes. Therewasmorehungerinthose eye sthan we could fill with all our food. I thought I had probably made a mistake. These peoplewere so desperate, they were dangerous. It didn't matter at all that they lookedharmless. Theywerestillaliveandstrongenoughtorun. Theywere notharmless.

ItwasJustinwhoeasedsomeofthetensioninthoseb ottomless, hungry eyes. Stark naked, hetoddledoverto thewomanandthegirlandlookedthem over. The little girl only sta red back, but after a moment, the woman began to smile. She saidsomethingtoJustin,andhesmiled. Thenheranback to Allie whoh eld on to him longe nough to dresshim.Buthehaddonehiswork.Thewoman wasseeinguswithdifferenteyes.Shewatched Natividadnursing Dominic,thenwatchedBankole combinghisbeard.Thisseemedfunnytoherandtothe child, and they both giggled.

"You're a hit," I told Bankole.

"I don't see what'sso funny about a man combinghisbeard,"hemuttered,andputawayhiscomb.

I dug sweet pearsout of my pack, and tookone each to the woman and girl. I had just bought them two days before, and I had only three left. Otherpeoplegottheideaandbegansharingwhatthey couldspare. Shelle dwalnuts, apples, apomegran ate, Valenciaoranges, figs. . . . Littlethings.

"Save what you can," Natividad told the womanasshegaveheralmondswrappedinapieceofredcloth. "Wrap thing sin here and tie the ends together."

We all shared cornbread madewith a little honeyandthehard-boiledeggsweboughtandcooked yesterday. Webakedthecornbreadinthecoalsoflast night' sfire so that we could getaway early thismorning. Thewoman andthegirlateasthoughtheplain, cold foo dwere the best they had ever tasted, asthoughtheycouldn't believe someonehadgivenit to them. They crouched ove rit as though theywereafraidwemights natchitback.

"We've got to go," I said at last. "The sun'sgetting hotter."

Thewomanlookedatme, herstrange, sharpface hungryagain, butnown othungryforfood.

"Let us go with you," she said, her words tumbling over oneanother. "We'll work. We'llget wood, make fire, clean dishes, anything. Takeuswith you." Bankole looked at me. "I assume you saw thatcoming."

Inodded. Thewomanwaslooking from one of us to the other.

"Anything," shewhispered--orwhimpered. Hereyeswere dry and starved, but tear sstreamed from the little girl'seyes.

"Give us a moment to decide," I said. I meant, Goaway so my friends ca nyell at me in private, but the woman didn't seem to understand. She didn't move.

"Wait over there," I said, pointing toward the trees nearest to the road. "Let us talk. Thenwe'll tell you." She didn't want to do it. She hesitated, then stood up, pulled her even more reluctant daughter up, and trudgedofftothetreesIhadindicated.

"Oh God," Zahra muttered. "We're going to take them, aren't we?"

"That's what wehave to decide," I said.

"What, we feedher, and thenweget to tell her to go away and finish starving?" Zahra made anoise of disgust.

"If she isn't a thief," Bankolesaid, "And if she doesn't have any otherdangeroushabits, wemay be able to carry them. That littlekid. ..."

"Yes," I said. "Bankole, is there room for them atyourplace?"

"His place?" three others asked. I hadn't had a chance to tell them about it. And I hadn't had thenerve.

"Hehasalotoflandupnorthandoverbythecoast," I said. "There 's a family house that we can't live inbecause hissisterandherfamilyarethere. Butthere's room and trees and water. He says. . . . " I swallowed, looked at Bankole wh owas smiling alittle. "Hesayswecanstart Earthseed there--build what we can."

"Are there jobs?"Harry asked Bankole.

"Mybrother-in-lawmanages with year-round gardens and temporary jobs. He's raising three kids that way."

"But the jobs do pay money?"

"Yes, they pay. Not well, but they pay. We'd betterholdofftalkingaboutthisforawhile.We'retorturingthat young woman over there."

"She'll steal," Natividadsaid. "She says she won't, butshewill. You can look atherand tell."

"She's been beaten," Jill said. "The way they rolled up when we first spotted them. They're used to being beaten, kicked, knocked around."

"Yeah." Allie lookedhaunted. "You try to keepfrom getting hit in the head, try to protect youreyes and. .

.your front. She thought we would beat her. She andthekidboth."

Interesting that Allie and Jill shouldunderstand so well. What a terrible fatherthey had. And what hadhap penedtotheirmother? They had nevertalked about her. It was ama zing that they had escapedalive and saneen oughtofunction.

"Should we let her stay?" I asked them.

Bothgirlsnodded. "Ithinkshe'llbeapainintheassfor a while, though," Allie said. "Like Nativida dsays, she'll steal. She won't be able to stopherself. We'll have to watchher real good. That little kid will steal too. Steal and run like hell."

Zahra grinned. "Remindsme of me at that age. They'll both be pains in theass. I vote we try them. If they have mannersorif they can learn manners, we keepthem. If they're too stupid to learn, we throw them out."

IlookedatTravisandHarry,standingtogether.

"Whatdoyouguyssay?"

"The next one might." I leaned towardher. "Theworldisfullofcrazy,dangerouspeople. Weseesigns of that every day. If we don't watcho ut for ourselves, they will rob us, kill us, and maybe eat us. It's aworld gone to hell, Jill, and we've only goteach other to keep it off us."Sullensilence.

I reached out and took her hand. "Jill."

"It wasn't my fault!" she said. "You can't prove I--"

"Jill!"

Sheshutupandstaredatme.

"Listen, no oneisgoing to beat you up, for heavensake, butyoudidsomethingwrong, somethingdangero us. You knowyou did."

"So what do you want her to do?" Allie demanded.

"Getonherkneesandsayshe'ssorry?"

"Iwanthertoloveherownlifeandyoursenoughnotto be careless. That' swhat I want. That's what you should want, now more than ever. Jill?"

Jill closed her eyes. "Oh shit!" shesaid. And then,

"All right, all right! I didn't see them. I really didn't. I'll watch better. No one else will get by me."

Iclaspedherhandforamomentlonger, thenletitgo. "Okay. Let'sg et out of here. Let'scollect that scaredwom anandherscaredlittlekidandgetout of here."

Thetwoscaredpeopleturnedouttobethemostracially mixed that I had ever met. Here's their sto ry, put together from the fragments they toldusduringthedayandtonight. Thewomanhada Japanese father, a black mothe r, and a Mexicanhusband, all dead. Only she and her daughter are left. Her name is Emery Tanaka Solis. Herdaughter is Tori Solis.

Tori is nine years old, not seven as I hadguessed. Isuspectshehasrarelyhadenoughtoeatinherlife. She's tiny, quick, quiet, and hungry -eyed. She hid bits of food in her filthy ragsuntil we made her a newdress from one of Bankole's shirts. Then she hid food in that. Although Tori isnine, her motheris only

23. At 13, Emery married a much older man whopromised to take care of her. Her father was already dead, killed in some one else's gunfight. Hermother was sick, and dying of tuberculosis. The mother pushed Emery into marriage to save her from victimization and starvation in the streets.

Up to that point, the situation wasdreary, but normal. Emery had three childrenover the next threeyears--adaughterandtwosons. Sheandher husbanddid farmworkintradeforfood, shelter, and hand-me-downs. Then the farmwas sold to a big agribusiness conglome rate, and the workers fell into newhands. Wages were paid, but incompany scrip, notincash. Rentwas charged for the workers' shacks. Workershad to pay for food, for clothing--new or used-- for everything they needed, and, of course they could only spend their company notes at the company store. Wages--surprise!--were never quite enough to pay the bills. According to new laws that might or might not exist, people were not permitted to leave an employer to whom they owed money. They were obligated to work off the debt eitherasquasi-indenturedpeopleorasconvicts. That is, if they refused to work, they couldbe arreste d, jailed, and in the end, handed over to their employers.

.

Either way, such debt slavescould be forced worklongerhoursforlesspay, could be "disciplined" if they failed to meet their quota s, could be traded and soldwith or without their consent, with or without their families, to distant employers who had temporary or permanent need of them. Worse, childrencould be forced to work off the debt of their parents if the parents died, became disabled, or escaped.

Emery'shusbandsickenedanddied. Therewasno doctor, nomedicine beyond a few expensive over-the-counterpreparations and the herbsthat the workers grew in their tiny gardens. Jorge Francisco Solis died infeverand pain on the earthen floor of his shack without everseeing adoctor. Bankoles aid it sounded as tho ughhedied of peritonitis brought on by untreate dappendicitis. Such a simple thing. But then, there 's nothing more replaceable than unskilled labor.

EmeryandherchildrenbecameresponsiblefortheSolis debt. Accepting thi s, Emery worked andenduredu ntiloneday, withoutwarning, hersonswere taken away. They were one and two years youngerthanherdaughter, and too young to be without both their parents. Yet they were taken. Emerywas not asked to part with them, norwas she told what would be don e with them. She had terrible suspicions when shere covered from the drugshe had been given to "quiether down." She cried and demanded the return of her son sand would not workagainuntilhermastersthreatenedtotakeher daughteraswell.

She decided thento runaway, to take herdaughterandbravetheroadswiththeirthieves, rapists, and cannibal s. Theyhadnothing for anyone to steal, and rapewasn't something they could escape by remaining slaves. As for the cannibals... well, perhaps they were only fantasies—lies intended to frighten slaves into accepting their lot.

"Therearecannibals," I told her as we ate that night.

"We've seen them. I think, though, that they're scavengers, not killers. They takeadvantage of road kills, that kind of thing."

"Scavengers kill," Emery said. "If you get hurt or if you looksick, they come after you."

Inodded, and shewenton with herstory. Late one night, she and Torislipped outpast the armed guards and ele ctrified fences, the sound and motion detectors and the dogs. Both knew how to be quiet, how to fade from cover to cover, how to lie still for hours. Both were very fast. Slaves learned things likethat--theoneswholiveddid. Emeryand Torimust have been very lucky.

Emeryhadsomenotionoffindinghersonsand gettingthemback, butshehadnoideawheretheyhad been taken. They had beend riven away in a truck; sheknewthat much. But she didn't knowevenwhichwaythetruck turnedwhenitreachedthe highway. Herparentshadtaughthertoreadand write, butshehadseennowritingabout hersons. She had to admit after a while that all sh ecould dowassaveherdaughter.

Livingonwildplantsandwhatevertheycould"find"or beg, they drifted north. That was the way Eme ry said it: they found things. Well, if I were in her place, I would have found a few things, too.

Agangfightdrovehertous.Gangsarealwaysa specialdangerincities.Ifyoukeeptotheroadwhileyou're in individ ual gang territorie s, you might escape their attentions. We havesofar. But theovergrownparklandwhere wecampedlastnight was, according to Emery, in dispute. Twogangs shotateachotherandcalledinsultsandaccusations backand forth. Nowandthentheystoppedtoshootat passing trucks. Durin gone of these intervals, Emeryand Toriwho hadcamped close to the roadside had slipped away.

"Onegroupwascomingclosertous,"Emerysaid.

"They would shoot and run. Whenthey ran, they got closer. We had to getaway. We couldn't let them hearusorseeus. We found yourclearing,but wedidn'tsee you. Youknowhowtohide."

That, I suppose wasacompliment. We try todisappearintothescenerywhenthat'spossible. Most of the time it isn't. Tonight it isn't. And tonight we watch two at a time.

"He doesn't trust us. Why should he? We'llhave to watch all four of them for a while. They're. . . odd. They might be stupid enough to try to grabsome of our packs and leaves omenight. Or it might just be a matter of littlethings starting to disappear. The children are more likely to get caught at it. Yet if the adults stay, it will be for the children's sake. If we take it easy on the children and protect them, I think the adults will be loyal to us."

"Sowebecomethecrewofamodernundergroundrailroad," I said. Slavery again-- eve nworse than my father thought, or at least sooner. He thought itwouldtakeawhile.

"None of thisisnew." Bankolemade himself comfortable against me. "In the early 1990swhile Iwasincolle ge, Iheardaboutcases of growers doing some of this--holding people against their wills and forcing them towork without pay. Latins in California, blacks and Latins in the south.... Now and then, some one would go to jail for it."

"ButEmerysaysthere'sanewlaw--thatforcing

peopleortheirchildren to work off debt that theycan'thelprunningupislegal."

"Maybe. It'shard to know what to believe. Isuppose the politiciansmay have passed a law that could be used to support debt slavery. But I've heard nothing about it. Anyone dirty enough to be a slaveris dirty enoughtotellapackoflies. Yourealize that that woman's children were sold like cattle--and no doubt sold into prostitution."

I nodded. "She knows too."

"Yes. My God."

"Thingsarebreakingdownmoreandmore." Ipaused. "I'll tell you, though, if we can convince ex-slaves that they canh ave freedom withus, no onewillfighthardertokeepit. Weneedbetterguns, though. And we need to be so careful. . . . It keeps getting more dangerous out here. It will be especially dangerous withthose littlegirls around."

"Thosetwoknowhowtobequiet,"Bankolesaid.

"They're little rabbits, fast and silent. That's why they're still alive."

24

RespectGod:Pray working. Praylearning, planning, doing.

Praycreating, teaching, reaching.

Pray working.

Praytofocusyourthoughts, still your fears, strengthenyourprupose. RespectGod.

ShapeGod.Pray working.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2027

WereadsomeversesandtalkedaboutEarthseedfor a while thi smorning. It was a calming thing to do-- almost like church. We needed something calmingandreassuring. Eventhenewpeoplejoined in askingquestions, thinking aloud, applying the verses to their experiences.

Godi sChange, and in the end, Goddoesprevail.

But we have something to sayabout the whens and the whys of that end.

Yeah.

It'sbeenahorribleweek.

We've taken both today and yesterdayasrest days. We might take tomorrowaswell. I need it whether theothersdoornot. We'reallsoreandsick, in mourningandexhausted--yettriumphant. Oddtobetriumphant. I think it's because most of us are still alive. We are ah arvest of survivors. But then, that's what we've always been.

Thisiswhathappened.

At our noonstop on Tuesday, Tori andDoe, the two little girls, wentaway from the group to urinate. Emery went with them. Shehad kindof takenchargeofDoeaswellasherowndaughter. Thenight before, shean dGraysonMorahadslippedaway fromthegroupandstayedawayforoveranhour. HarryandIwereonwatch, and wesawthemgo. Nowtheywereacouple--allovereachother, butatarm's length from everyon eelse. Strange p eople.

So Emery took the girls off to pee--not far away. Just across the hill face and out of sight behindapatch ofdeadbushesandtall,drygrass. Therestofus sat eating, drinkin g, and sweating in what shadewecouldget fromacopseofoaktreesthatlooked onlyhalfdead. Thetreeshadbeenrobbedofagreat numberofbranches, nodoubtbypeopleneeding firewood. I waslookingattheirmanyjaggedwounds when the screaming began.

First there were the high, needle thin, needlesharp shrieks of the little girls, then we heard Emeryshouting forhelp. Thenweheardaman's voice, cursing.

Idiedwithsomeoneelse. Someonelaidhandson meand I camewithina finger's twitch of squeezing the triggeronce more.

Bankole.

"You stupid asshole!" I whimpered. "I almost killed you."

"You'rebleeding,"hesaid.

Iwassurprised.ItriedtorememberwhetherI'dbeenshot. Maybe I had just comed own on a sharp piece of wood. I had nosense of my own body. I hurt, but Icouldn'thavesaidwhere--orevenwhetherthepain was mineorsomeoneelse's. Thepainwasintense, yet diffu sesomehow. I felt...disembodied.

"Iseveryoneelseallright?" Iasked.

"Be still," he said.

"Is it over, Bankole?"

"Yes. The survivors have runaway."

"Take my gun, then, and give it to Natividad-- incasetheydecidetocomeback."

I think I felt him take the gun from my hand. I heard muffled talk that I didn't quite understand. That was when I realized I was losing consciousness. All right then. At least I had held on longenough to do some good.

Jill Gilchrist is dead.

Shewasshotinthebackassherantowardthe

treescarryingTori.Bankoledidn'ttellme,didn'twantme to kno wbefore I had to because, as it turnedout, I was wounded myself. I was lucky. My woundwas minor. It hurt, but other than that, it didn't matter much. Jillwasunlucky. I found out about her death whenI came to andheard Allie'shoarse screaming grief.

JillhadgottenToribacktothetrees,putherdown,then, without a sound, folded to theg round asthoughtaking cover. EmeryhadgrabbedToriandhuddle d, cryingwith her in terror and relief. Everyoneelsehadbeenbusy, firsttakingcover, then firing or directing fire. Travis was the first to see thebloodpoolingaroundJill. Hesho utedfor Bankole, thenturnedJillontoherbackandsawblood welling from what turnedo ut to be an exitwound inherchest. Bankolesaysshediedbefore hereachedher, Nolastwords, nolastsightofhersiste r, not even the ass urance that she had saved the little girl. She had. Tori was bruised, but fine. Everyone was fine except Jill.

Myownwound,tobehonest,wasabigscratch. A bullethadplowedafurrowstraightthroughthefleshof my left side, leaving little damage, a lot of blood, a cou ple of holesin my shirt, and a lot of pain. Thewoundthro bbedworsethanaburn,butitwasn't disabling.

"Cowboywound,"HarrysaidwhenheandZahra came to lookme over. They looked dirty and miserable, but Harry tried to be upbeat for me. They had j ust helped to bury Jill. The grouphad, withhands, sticks, and our hatchet, dugashallow grave for her while I was unconscious. They puther among the trees roots, covered her, and rolled bigrocks at opher grave. The trees were to have her, but the dogs and the cannibals were not.

The grouphadde cided to be downforthen ight where we were, even thoughour oak copses hould have been rejected as an overnight camp be cause it was too close to the highway.

"You'reagoddamnfoolandtoobigtocarry,"Zahratold me. "So just rest there and let Ban kole take care of you. Not that anyone could stop him."

"You'vejustgotacowboywound,"Harryrepeated.

"In that book I bought, people are always gettingshotinthesideorthearmortheshoulder, and it's nothing-although Bankolesays a good percentage of them would have died of tetanus or some other infection."

"Thanksfortheencouragement," Isaid.

Zahra gave him a look, then patted my arm. "Don't worry," she said. "No germ will get past that old man. He'smadashell at you for getting yourself shot. Says if you had any sense, you would havestayed backherewiththebabies."

"What?"

"Hey, he's old," Harry said. "What do you expect." I sighed. "How's Allie?"

"Crying." Heshookhishead. "Shewon't letanyone near herexcept Justin. Even hekeepstrying to comfort her. It upsets him that she's crying."

"Emery and Tori arekind of beatenup, too," Zahra said. "They're the other reasonwe'renot moving." She paused. "Hey, Lauren, you evernoticeanything funny about those two-- Emery and Tori, I mean? And about that guy Mora, too."

"Howmany times did you die?" Mora askedme.

"Three at least," I answered, as though this were a saneconversation. "Maybe four. I never did it like that before-- overand over. Insane. But you lookwellenough."

Hisexpressionhardenedasthoughl'dslappedhim.Of course, I had insulted him. I'd said ,Where were you, man and fellow sharer, while your woman and your group were in danger. Funny. ThereIwas, speakingalanguageIhadn'trealizedIknew.

"I had to get Doe out of danger," he said. "I had no gun, anyway."

"Canyoushoot?"

He hesitated. "Nevershot before," headmitted,droppinghisvoicetoamumble.AgainI'dshamedhim-- thi s time without meaning to.

"Whenwe teach you to shoot, will you, to protect the group?"

"Yeah!" Though at that moment, I think he would have preferred to shoot me.

"It hurts like hell," I warned.

He shrugged. "Most thingsdo."

Ilookedintohisthin,angryface.Wereallslavessothin--underfed, overworke d, and taught that most thingshurt? "Are you from thisarea?"

"Born in Sacramento."

"Then we need all the information you can giveus. Even without a gun, we need you to help ussurvive here."

"My information is to get out of here before thosethingsupthehillthrowpaintonthemselvesandstart shooting peopleandsettingfires."

"Oh, shit," I said. "So that's what they are."

"What'dyouthinktheywere?"

"I didn't have a chance to think about them. It wouldn't have mattered anyway. Harry, did you guysstrip thedead?"

"Yeah." He gave me a thin smile. "We got another gun-- a .38. I put some stuff in your pack from theone syoukilled."

"Thank you. I don't knowthat I can carry my pack yet. Maybe Bankole--"

"He'salreadygotitonhiscart.Let'sgo." Weheadedouttowardtheroad.

"Isthathowyoudoit?"GraysonMoraasked, walkingnexttome."Whoeverkillstakes?"

"Yes, but we don't kill unlesssomeone threatens us," I said. "We don't hunt people. Wedon't eat human fl esh. We fight together against enemies. If one of usisin need, the rest helpout. And we don't steal from one another, ever."

"Emery said that. I didn't believe her at first."

"Will you live as we do?"

"...yeah. I guess so."

I hesitated. "So what else is wrong? I cansee that you don't trust us, even now."

He walkedcloserto me, but did not touch me.

"Where'd that white man come from?" hedemanded.

"I've known him all my life," I said. "He and I and theothershavekeptoneanotheraliveforalongtime, now."

"But. . .him and those others, they don't feel anything. You're the only one who feels."

"We call it sharing. I'm the only one."

"But they.... You...."

"Wehelpeachother. Agroup is strong. One or two people are easier to robandkill."

"Yeah." He lookedaround at the others. There was no great trust or liking in his expression, but he looked more relaxed, more satisfied. He lookedasthoughheladsolvedatroublingpuzzle.

Testing him, I let myself stumble. It was easy. I still had little feeling in my feet and legs.

Morastepped aside. He didn't touch me or offer help. Sweet guy.

I left Mora, went over to Allie, and walkedwith her for a while. Hergrief and resentment were like a wall against me-- against everyone, I suppose, but I was the one bothering her at the moment. And I was aliveandhersisterwasdead, andhersisterwastheonly family she had left, and why didn't I just get the hell out of her face?

She neversaid anything. She just pretended I wasn'tthere. Shepushed Justinalonginhis carriage and wiped tears from her stony face now and then with a swift, whiplike motion. She washurting herself, doing that. She was rubbing her face too hard, too fast, rubbing it raw. She washurting metoo, and I didn't need any more pain. I stayed with her, though, until her defenses began to crumble under an ewwave of crippling grief. She stopped hurting he rselfand justlet the tear srun down her face, let them fall to her chest or to the broken black top. She seem ed to sagunder as udden weight.

I hugged her then. I put my handsonher shouldersandstoppedherhalf-blindplodding. Whensheswunga rou nd to face me, hostile and hurting, Ihuggedher. Shecouldhavebrokenfree. Iwasfeeling far fro mstrongjust then, but after a firstangrypullingaway, shehungontomeandmoaned.

I've never heard anyone moanlike that. She criedandmoanedthereattheroadside, and theothers stopped and waited forus. Noonespoke. Justin began to whimper and Natividad came back to comforthim. The wordless message was the same for both child and woman: In spite of your loss and pain, you aren't alone. You still have people who care about you and want you to be all right. You still have family.

Shenodded, then glanced sidelong at Bankole.

"He knows," I assured her. "But. . .look, you and Graysonare the first sharers I've known whohadchild ren."Therewasnoreasontotellhersheand Graysonandtheirchildrenwerethefirstsharers I'dkno wn period. "I hope to have kidsmyself someday, so I need to know. . .do they always inherit thesharing?"

"One of my boys didn't have it," she said. "Somefeelers--sharers--can'thaveanykids.Idon'tknow why. AndIknewsomewhohadtwoorthreekidswho didn't have it at all. Bosses, though, they like you to have it."

"I'llbettheydo."

"Sometimes," she continued, "sometimesthey paymoreforpeoplewhohaveit. Especiallykids."

Herkids. Yet they had taken a boy who wasn't asharerandleftagirlwhowas. Howlongwould thave been be fore they cameback for the girl?

Perhapstheyhadalucrativeofferfortheboysasapair, sothey sold them first.

"My god," Bankole said. "Thiscountry hasslippedback200years."

"Thingswere betterwhen I waslittle," Emerysaid.

"My mother alwayssaidthey would get better again.Goodtimeswouldcomeback.Shesaidtheyalways did. Myfatherwouldshakehisheadandnotsay anything."ShelookedaroundtoseewhereToriwas andspottedheron GraysonMora'sshoulders. Then shecaughtsightofsomethingelse,andshegasped. Wefollowedhergazeandsa wfirecreepingoverthe hillsbehindus--farbehindus,butnotfarenough. Thiswassomenewfire,whippingalongin thedryeveningb reeze. Either the peoplewho attacked us had followedus, setting fires,orsomeone was imitating them, echoing them.

We went on, moving faster, trying to see where we could go to be safe. One itherside of the highway, there was d ry grass, there were trees, living and dead. So far, the firewas only on the north side. We kept to the south side, hoping it would be safe.

There was a lake ahead, according to my map of thearea--ClearLake, itwascalled. Themapshowed itto be large, and the highway followed its northern shorefora few miles. We would reach its oon. How soon?

Icalculatedaswewalked.Tomorrow.Weshouldbe abletocampnearittomorrowevening. Notsoon enough.

Icouldsmellthesmokenow.Didthatmeanthewind wasblowingthefiretowardus?

Otherpeoplebeganhurryingandkeepingtothe southsideoftheroadandheadingwest. Noone wenteastnow. The erewerenotrucksyet, butitwas gettinglate. Theywould be barrelingthrough soon. And we should be camping for the night soon. Did wedare?

The southside still seemed free of firebehindus, but on the northside the firecrawled afterus, coming no closer, but refusing to be left behind.

We went on for a while, all of us looking back often, all of us tired, some of us hurting. I called ahalt and gesturedusoff the road to the south at a placewheretherewasroomtositandrest.

"We can't stay here," Mora said. "The firecould jump the roadany time."

"Wecanresthereforafewmoments," Isaid. "Weca nsee the fire, and it will tell us when we'd betterstartwalki ngagain."

"We'dbetter start now!" Mora said. "If thatfire gets going good, it will move faster than wecan run! Best to keepwell ahead of it!"

"Best to have the strength to keepahead of it," I said, and I took a water bottle from my pack anddrank. Wewerewithin sight of the road and we had made it a rulenottoeatordrinkinsuchexposedplaces, but today that rule had to be suspe nded. To go into the hills away from the road might meanbeingcutofffromtheroadbyfire. We couldn't know when or where a wind blown piece of burning debrismight land.

Othersfollowedmyexampleanddrankandatealittle dried fruit, meat, and bread. Bankole and I sha redwith Emery and Tori. Mora seemed to want to leave in spite of us, but hisdaughter Doe wassittinghalfasleepon the ground against Zahra. He stoopednext to her and made her drinkalittle water and eat some fruit.

"We might have to keep moving all night," Allie said, her voice almost too soft to hear. "This might be the only rest we get." And to Travis, "You'd better putDominicintothecarriagewithJustinwhenhe'sfinishede a ting."

Travisnodded. He'dcarried Dominicthis far. Nowhe tucked him in with Justin. "I'll push the carriage for a while," he said.

Bankolelookedatmywound,rebandagedit,andthis time gave me something for the pain. He buri ed the bloody bandageshehad removed, digging ashallowholewithaflatrock.

Emery, with Tori gone to sleep against her, looked to seewhatBankolewasdoingwithme, then jumped and looked away, her handgoing to herownside.

"I didn't knowyou were hurt so much," shewhispered.

"I'm not," I said, and mademyself smile. "It looks nastierthan it is with all the blood, but it isn't bad. I'm damned lucky compared to Jill. And it doesn't stop me from walking."

"You didn't give me any painwhenwe werewalking,"shesaid.

I nodded, glad to knowI could fake her out. "It's ugly," I said, "but not too painful."

Shesettleddownasthoughshefeltbetter.Nodoubt shedid.IfImoanedandgroaned,I'dhaveallfourofthem moanin gandgroaning. Thekidsmight evenbleedalongwithme.Iwouldhavetobecarefuland keeplyingatleastas longasthefirewasathreat-- oraslongasIcould.

Thetruthwas,thoseblood-saturatedbandagesscare dthe hell out of me, and the wound hurt worse than ever. But I knew I had to keep going orburn. Afterafewminutes, Bankole's pillsbegantotake the edge off my pain, and that made the whole worldeasiertoendure.

Wehadaboutanhour's restbefore the fire made us too nervou sto stay where we were. Then we got up and walked. By then, at some point behind us, the fire had already jumped the road. Now, neither the north nor the south sidelookedsafe. Until it wasdark, allwecouldseeinthehillsbehinduswassmo ke. It was a terrifying, looming, movingwall. Later, afterdark, we could see the fire eating its way toward us. The rewere dogs running along the road with us, but they paid no attention to us. Catsand deerran pastus, and askunk scuttled by. It was live and let live. Neither humans nor an imals were foolishen oughtowaste time attacking one another. Behindu sand to the north, the fire began to roar. We put Toriinthe carriage and Justin and Dominic between her legs. The babies never even woke up while we were moving them. Tori herself was more than half as leep. I worried that the carriage might break down with the extra weight, but it held. Travis, Harry, and Allie traded off pushing it.

Doe, we put atop the load on Bankole's cart. Shecouldn'thavebeencomfortablethere, butshedidn't compl ain. Shewasmoreawakethan Tori, and she had been walking on herown most of the times ince our encounter with the would-bekidnappers. She was astrong little kid--her father's daughter. Grayson Morahelped push Bankole's cart. In fact, once Doewasloaded aboard, Morapushed the cart most of the time. The man wasn't like able, but in his love for his daughter, he was admirable.

At some point in the endless night, more smoke andashthaneverbegantoswirlaroundus, and I caught myself thinking that we might not make it. Without stopping, we wet shirts, scarves, whatever we had, and tied the maround our noses and mouths.

Thefireroaredandthundereditswaypastusonthe north, singeingourhairandclothing, making breathing a terrible effort. The babie swokeupandscreamedinfearandpain, then chokedandalmost brought me down. Tori, crying herself with their painandherown, heldontothemandwould not let them struggleout of the carriage.

I thought we would die. I believed there wasnoway for us to survive this sea of fire, hot wind, smoke, andash.Isawpeople--strangers--fall,andweleftthem lying on the highway, waiting to burn. I stopped looki ngback.Intheroarofthefire,Icouldnothear whethertheyscreamed.Icouldseethebabiesbefor eNatividad thre wwet ragsoverthem. I knew they werescreaming. ThenI couldn't see them, anditwasablessing.

Webegantorunoutofwater.

Therewasnothingtodoexceptkeepgoingorburn. Theterrible, deafening noise of the fire increased, then less en ed, and again, increased, then less ened. It seemed that the fire went north a way from the road, then whipped backdown toward us.

It teased like a living, malevolent thing, intent on causingpain and terror. It drove usbefore it like dogs ch asing a rabbit. Yet it didn't eat us. It could have, but it didn't.

In the end, the worst of it roaredoff to the northwest. Firestorm, Bankolecalled it later. Yes. Like atoma dooffire, roaring around, just missing us, playing with us, the nletting us live.

We could not rest. There wasstill fire. Little fires that could grow into bigones, smoke, blinding and chokings moke. . . . No rest.

Butwecouldslowdown. We could emerge from the worst of the smo keand ash, and escape the lash of hot win ds. We could pause by the side of the road for amoment, and gagin peace. There was a lot of gagging. Coughing and gagging and crying muddy tracks onto our faces. It was incredible. We were going to survive. We were still alive and together--scorched and miserable, in great need of water, but a live. We were going to make it.

Later, when we dared, we went off the road,unloadedmypackfromBankole'scart,anddugouthis extra water bottle. He dug it out. He'd toldu shehaditwhenhecouldhavekeptitforhimself.

"We'll reach Clear Lakesometime tomorrow," Isaid.

"Early tomorrow, I think. I don't knowhow far we'vecomeorwherewearenow,soIcanonlyguessthatwe'll get the re early. But it is there waiting forus tomorrow."

Peoplegruntedorcoughedanddownedswallowsfrom Bankole's extra bottle. The kidshad to be preventedfromguzzlingtoomuchwater. Asitwas, Dominicchokedandbegantocryagain.

We campedwherewe were, withinsight of the road. Two of ushad to stay awakeon watch. I volunteered forfirstwatchbecauseIwasintoomuchpaintosleep. I got my gun back fro mNatividad, checked toseethat shehadreloadedit--shehad--andlooked aroundforapartner.

"I'll watch with you, " Grayson Mora said.

Thatsurprisedme. I would have preferred some one who knew how to use a gun--some one I would trust with a gun.

"I'm not going to be able to sleep until you do," hesaid. "It'sthatsimple. So let'sboth put our pain togoodu se."

IlookedatEmeryandthetwogirlstoseewhetherthey'd heard, but they seemed to be already asleep.

"All right." Isaid. "We've got to watch forstrangers and fire. Give me a yell if you see anythingunusual."

"Give me a gun," he said. "If anybody comesclose, I can at least use it to scare them."

In the dark, sure. "No gun," I said. "Not yet. Youdon'tknowenoughyet."

Hestaredatmeforseveralseconds, then went over to Bankole. He turne dhis back to me ashespoke to Bankole. "Look, you know I need a gun to do any guarding in aplace like this. She doesn't know how it is. She thinks she doesn't."

Bankole shrugged. "If you can't do it, man, go to sleep. One of uswill take the watchwith her."

"Shit," Mora made the word longandnasty. "Shiiit. First time Isaw her, Iknew she wasa man. Justdidn'tkn owshewastheonlymanhere."

Absolutesilence.

DoeMorasavedthesituationtothedegreethatitcould be saved. At that moment she steppedup behindh er fatherand tapped himonthe back. He spunaround, more than ready to fight, spunwithsuchspeedandfury thatthelittlegirlsquealedand jumpedback.

"Whatthehellareyoudoingup!"heshouted."Whatdo you want!"

Frightened, the little girl just stared at him. After amoment, sheextendedherhand, offering apomegran ate. "Zahra said we could have this," she whispered. "Would you cut it?"

Good thinking, Zahra! I didn't turn to lookat her, but Iwasawareofherwatching. Bynow, everyonestill awa kewaswatching.

"Everyone's tired and everyone'shurting," I told him.

"Everyone, not just you. But we've managed to keep ourselvesalive by working together and by not doin g or sayingstupid things."

"And if that's not good enough for you," Bankoleadded,inavoicelowanduglywithanger, "tomorrowyou can g oout and find yourself a different kind of grouptotravelwith--agrouptoogoddamnmachoto wasteitstimesavingyourchild'slifetwiceinoneday."

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2027

Somehow,we'vereachedournewhome--Bankole'sland in the coa stal hills of Humbolt County. Thehigh way--U.S.101--istotheeastandnorthofus, andCapeMendocinoandtheseaaretothewest. A fewmilessoutha restateparksfilledwithhuge redwoodtreesandhoardsofsquatters. Thelandsurroundin gus, however, is ase mpty and wildas any I've seen. It's covered with dry brush, trees, and tree stumps, all far removed from any city, and a long, hilly walk from the little towns that line thehighway. There's farming aroundhere, and log ging, and just plain isolated living. According to Bankole, it's best to mind you rown businessand not pay toomuchattentiontohowpeopleonneighboring plots of land earn a living. If they hijack trucks on 101, grow marijuana, distill whisky, or brew up more complicated illegal substances. ... Well, live and let live.

Bankoleguidedusalonganarrowblacktoppedroad thatsoonbecameanarrowdirtroad. Wesawafewcultivated fields, som escarsleft by past firesor logging, and a lot of land that seemed unused. Theroadallbutvanished beforewecametotheendof it. Good for isolation. Bad for getting thingsinorout. Bad for travelingback and forth to get work. Bank olehadsaidhisbrother-in-lawhadtospendalotoftimein various towns, away from his family. That was easier tounderstandnow. There'snopossibilityhereof comingh ome every day or two. So what did youhavetodoto savecash? Sleepindoorwaysor parksintown? Maybeitwas worth the inconvenience to dojust that if you could keep your family together and safe-- far from the desperate, the crazy, and the vicious.

Orthat's what I thought until were ached the hillside where Bankole's sister's house and outbuildings were suppose dtobe.

Therewasnohouse. Therewere no buildings. There was almost nothing: A broad blacks mear on the hillside; a fe wcharred planks sticking up from the rubble, some leaning against others; and a tall brickchimney, standing black and solitary like atombstone in a picture of an old-style graveyard. A tombstone amidthebone sandashes.

25

Createnoimages of God. Accept the images thatGodhasprovided. Theyareeverywhere, in everything.

GodisChangeNSeed to tree, tree to fore st;Raintoriver, rivertosea; Grubstobees, beestoswarm.

From one, many;

from many, one;

Forever uniting, growing, dissolvingÑ foreverChanging. Theuniverse isGod'sself-portrait.

EARTHSEED: THE BOOKS OF THE LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2027

We'vebeenarguingallweekaboutwhetherornot weshouldstayherewiththebonesandashes. We'vefoundfive skulls--threeinwhatwasleftofthe houseandtwooutside. Therewereotherscatteredbones, but not one complet eskeleton. Dogshavebeenatthebones--dogsandcannibals, perhaps. Thefirehappenedlongenougha goforweedstobegin to grow in the rubble. Two months ago? Three? Someofthefar-flungneighborsmightkn ow. Some of the far-flungneighbors might have set thefire.

Therewasnowaytobecertain, but I assumed that thebonesbelongedtoBankole'ssisterandherfamily. Ithink Bankole assumed that too, but he couldn't bring himself to just bury the bonesand write off his sister. The day after wegot here, he and Harryhikedbackto Glory, thene are stsmall town that we had passed through, to talk to the local cop s. They were, or they professed to be, sheriff's deputies. I wonder what you have to do to become acop. Iwonder what abadge is, other than alicense to steal. What did it used to be to make people Bankole's age want to trust it. I know what the old books say, but still, I wonder.

ThedeputiesallbutignoredBankole'sstoryandhis questions. Theywrotenothingdown, claimedtokno wnothing . They treated Bankole as though they doubted that he evenhadasister, or that he waswhohesaidhewas. SomanystolenIDsthesedays. Theysearchedhimandtookthecashhewascarrying. Fees for poli ceservices, they said. Hehad beencareful to carry only what he thought would be enough to keepthem sweet-tempe red, but not enough to make them suspiciousormore greedythantheyalreadywere. Therest--asizablepacket --he left with me. He tru sted me enough to do that. HisgunheleftwithHarrywhohadgoneshopping.

JailforBankolecouldhavemeantbeingsoldintoa periodofhard,unpaidlabor--slavery.Perhapsifhe hadbeen younger,thedeputiesmighthavetaken hismoneyandarrestedhimanywayonsome trumped-upcharge. Ihadbeggedhimnottogo, notto tru st anypo lice or government official. It seemedtomesuchpeoplewerenobetterthangangswith theirrobbingandslaving.

Bankole agreed with me, yet he insisted on going.

"She was my little sister," he said. "I have to try, at least, to find out what happened to her. I need to kno wwho did this. Most of all, I need to knowwhetheranyofherchildrencouldhavesurvived. One orm ore of th ose five skullscouldhave belonged to the arsonists." He stared at the collection of bones. "I have to risk going to the sheriff's office," he continued. "But you don't. I don't want you with me. I don't want them getting any ideas about you, maybe findingout by accident thatyou'reasharer.Idon'twantmysister'sdeathtoc ostyou your life or your freedom."

We fought about it. I was afraid for him; he wasafraidforme,andwewerebothangrierthanwehad everbeen ateachother.Iwasterrifiedthathewouldbe killedo rarrested, andwe'dnever findout what happened to him. No one should travel alone in thisworld.

"Look,"hesaidatlast,"youcandosomegoodherewith the group. You'll have one of the four guns left here,an dyouknowhowtosurvive. You'reneededhere. If the cop sdecide they want me, you won't be able to do a thing. Worse, if they decide they wantyou, there'llbenothingIcandoexcepttake revenge, and be killedforit."

That slowed medown-- the thought that I mightcausehisdeathinsteadofbackinghimup. Ididn'tquite believe it, but it slowed me down .Harrysteppedinthenandsaidhewouldgo. Hewantedto anyway. Hecouldbuysome thingsforthegroup, and h ewanted to look for a job. He wanted to earnsomemoney.

"I'll do what I can," he told me just before they left.

"He'snotabadoldguy.I'llbringhimbacktoyou." Theybroughteachotherback,Bankoleafewthousand dollars poorer, and Harry still jobless-- thoughtheydidbringbacksuppliesandafewhandtools. Bankole kne wno more than hehad when heleftabouthissisterandherfamily,butthecopshadsaid they would come out to investigate the fire and thebones.

We worried that sooner or later, they might showup. We're still keepinga lookout for them, andwe've hidden--buried--mostofourvaluables. Wewanttobury the bones, but we don't dare. It's bothering Bankol e. Bothering him a lot. I've suggested we hold afuneralandgoaheadandburythebones. Thehellwith the cops. But he say sno. Best to give them as little provocation aspossible. If they came, theywould doe noughharm with their stealing. Best not to give them reason to do more.

There's a well with an old-fashioned hand pumpunder the rubble of an outbuilding. It still works. The sola r-powered electric pump near the house does not. We couldn't stay here long without a dependable water so urce. With the well, though, it's hard to leave--hard to walk away from possibles anctuary--inspite of arsonists and cops.

Bankoleownsthisland, freeandclear. There's a huge, halfruined garden plus citrustrees full of unripe fruit. We've already been pulling carrots and digging potatoeshere. There are plenty of other fruit and nuttrees plus wild pines, redwoods, and Dou glas firs. None of these last were very big. This area was logged sometime before Bankoleoughtit. Bankoles aysit was clear-cut back in the 1980 sor 1990 s, but we can make use of the trees that have grown since then, and we can plant more. We can build a shelter, put in a winter garden from the seed I've been carrying and collecting since we left home. Grant ed, a lot of it is old seed. I hadn't renewed it as often as I should have while I was at home. Strange that I hadn't. Things kept getting worse and worse at home, yet I had paid less and less attention to the pack that was supposed to save my life when the mobcame. There was somuchels etoworry about -- and I think I was into my own brandof denial, as bad in its way as Cory' sor Joanne 's mother's. But all that feelslikeancienthistory. Nowwas what we had to worry about. What were we going to do now?

"I don't think wecan make it here," Harry saidearlier this evening as we sataround the campfire. Theresho uldbesomethingcheerfulaboutsittingarounda campfirewithfriendsandafullstomach. Weevenhad meat tonig ht freshmeat. Bankole took the rifle and went off by himself for a while. Whenhecameback, hebroughtthree rabbitswhichZahraandI skinned, cleaned, androasted. Wealsoroasted sweetpotatoesthatwehaddugoutofthe garden. We should have been content. Yet all we were doing wasrehashingwhathadbecomeanoldargume nt overthepastfewdays. Perhapsitwasthebonesanda shes just overthe rise that were botheringus. We had campedout of sight of the burned area in the hope of recovering a little peace of mind, but ithadn'thelped. Iwasthinkingthatweshouldfigureout a way to capture a few wild rabbits alive andbreedthemforasuremeats upply. Wasthatpossible ?Why not, if we stay here? And we shouldstay.

"Nothingwe find farther north will be any better or any safer than this," I said. "It will be hard to live here, but if we work together, and if we're careful, it should be possible. We can build a communityhere."

"Oh,god,thereshegoeswithherEarthseedshit again," Allie said. But shesmiled a little as shesaid it. That was good. She hadn't smiled much lately.

"We can buildacommunity here," I repeated. "It'sdangerous, sure, but, hell, it'sdangerous everywhere, and themorepeoplethereare packed together incities, themore danger there is. This is a ridiculou splace to buildacom munity. It's isolated, miles from everywhere with node centroadleading here, but for us, for now, it's perfect."

"Exceptthatsomeoneburnedthisplacedownlasttime," GraysonM orasaid. "Anything webuild out here by itself is a target."

"Anything we buildanywhereisa target," Zahra argued. "But the people out herebefore. . . . I'm sorry Bankole, I gotta say this: They couldn't havekeptagoodwatch--amanandawomanandthreekid s. They would have workedhard allday, thensleptallnight. It would have been too hardon just two grown people to tryto situpandwatch for half the night each."

"Theydidn'tkeepanightwatch,"Bankolesaid.

"We'll have to keep one, though. And we coulduse a couple of dogs. If we could get them as puppies and trainthem to guard--"

"Give meat to dogs?" Morademanded, outraged.

"Not soon." Bankole shrugged. "Not until we have enough for ourselves. But if we canget dogs, they'llhelpuskeeptherestofourgoods."

"I wouldn't give a dognothingbut a bullet or a rock," Morasaid. "Isawdogseatawomanonce."

"There are no jobs in that town Bankole and I went to," Harrysaid. "There wasnothing. Not even work for roomand board. I asked all overtown. No one even knew of anything."

Ifrowned."Thetownsaroundhereareallclosetothe highway," I said. "They must get a lot of people passingt hrough,lookingforaplacetosettle--ormaybe a pla ce to rob, rape, kill. The locals wouldn'twelcomenewp eople. Theywouldn'ttrustanyonethey didn't kno w."

Harry looked frommeto Bankole.

"She's right," Bankolesaid. "My brother-in-lawhad ahardtimebeforepeoplebegantogetusedtohim, and he move dup here before thingsgot so bad. Heknewplumbing, carpentry, electricalwork, and motorvehicle me cha nics. Of course, it didn't help that hewasblack. Beingwhitemighthelpyouwinpeopleover faste rthan he did. I think, though, that any serious money we make here will come from theland. Foodisgold these days, and we can grow foodhere. We have guns to protect ourselves, so we can sellour crops innear by towns or on the highway."

"If we survive long enough to growanything to sell," Mora muttered. "If there's enough water, if the bugs don't eat our crops, if no one burnsusout the way they did those people over the hill, if, if, if!"

Allie sighed. "Shit, it's if, if anywhere you go. This place isn't so bad." She wassitting on hersleepsack, holdingthesleepingJustin'sheadinherlap. As sh espoke, she stroked the boy'shair. It occurred to me, not for the first time, that no matter how tough Allie tried to seem, that little boy was thekey to her. Children were the keysto most of the adultspresent.

"Therearenoguaranteesanywhere," Iagreed. "Butif we'r ewilling to work, our chances are good here. I've got some seed in my pack. We can buy more. What we have to do at this point ismore like gardening than farming. Everything will have to bedonebyhand--composting, watering, weeding, picking wormso rslug sorwhatever off the cropsand killing them one by one if that's what it takes. As for water, if our well still has water in it now, in October,

I don't think wehave to worry about it goingdry on us. Not this year, anyway."

"And if people threaten usorour crop, we kill them. That's all. We kill them, or they kill us. If we work together, we can defend ourselves, and we can protect the kids. A community's first responsibility isto protectitschildren--theoneswehavenowandthe ones we will have."

Therewassilenceforawhile, peopledigesting, perhapsmeasuring it against what they had to look forward to if they left this place and continued north.

"Weshoulddecide,"Isaid."Wehavebuildingandplanting to do here. We have to buy more foo d,moreseed andtools."Itwastimefordirectness:

"Allie, will you stay?"

She looked across the dead fire at me, staredhardatmeasthoughshehopedtoseesomethingonmy facethatwouldgiveherananswer.

"Whatseeddoyouhave?"sheasked.

I drew a deep breath. "Most of it is summerstuff--corn,peppers,sunflowers,eggplant,melons,tomatoe s, beans,squash. But I havesome winter things; peas, carrots, cabbage, broccoli, wintersquash,onions,aspar agus,herbs,severalkindsofgreens. . . . We can buy more, and we've got the stuff left in this garden plus what w ecanharvest from the local oak, pine, and citrus trees. I broughttreeseedstoo:moreoak,citrus,pe ach,pear,nectarine, almond, walnut, a few others. They won't dousanygoodforafewyears,butthey'reahellof an inve stment in the future."

"So is a kid," Allie said. "I didn't think I would be dumb enough to say this, but yeah, I'll stay. I want to build something too. I never had a chance to build anything before."

Allie, and Justinwereayes, then.

"Harry?Zahra?"

"Ofcoursewe'restaying,"Zahrasaid.

Harry frowned. "Wait a minute. We don't have to."

"I know. But we are. If we can make a communitylikeLaurensaysandnothavetohireoutto strangersandtru stthemwhentheyshouldn'tbetrusted, then we should do it. I fyou grewupwhere Idid,you'dknowweshould."

"Harry," I said, "I've known you all my life. You're the closest thing to a brother that I have left. You aren't really thinking about leaving, are you?" It wasn't theworld'sbestargument. Hehadbeenbothcousinand loverto Joanne, and he'dlether gowhenhe could have gone withher.

"I want something of my own," he said. "Land, a home, maybe a storeora small farm. Something that's mine. ThislandisBankole's."

"Yes," Bankolesaid. "And you'll begetting the use offitrentfree--andallthewateryouneed. Whatare thosethin gsgoingtocostyoufarthernorth--ifyou cangetthematallfarthernorth--ifyoucangetyourself out of California."

"Butthere'snoworkhere!"

"Not to work in those places. The women warned me."

"I've heard of placeslike that," Bankole said. "Theywere supposed to provide jobs for that northward-flowingriverofpeople.President

Donner's all for them. The workers are more throwaways thanslaves. They breathetoxic fumesordrinkcontaminatedwaterorgetcaughtinunshielded machine ry. ... It doesn't matter. They'reeasytoreplace--thousandsofjoblessforeveryjob."

"Borderworks," Mora said. "Not all of them are that bad. I heardsomepay cash wages, not companysc ript."

"Is that where you want to go?" I asked. "Or do you want to stay here?"

He looked down at Doewhowasstill nibbling at a piece of sweet potato. "I want to stay here," he said, surprisingme. "I'm not sure youhave a hope inhell of building anything here, but you're just crazy enough to make it work." And if it didn't work, he'dbenoworseoffthanhewaswhenheescaped slavery. Hecouldrob someoneandcontinuehisjourn ey north. Or maybe not. I'd been thinkingabout Mora. He did a lot to keep people away from him-- keepthem from knowing too muchabout him, keep them from seeingwhat he was feeling, or that hewasfeelinganything--amalesharer, desperate to hide his terrible vulnerability? Sharing would be harderonaman. Whatwould mybrothers have been like a ssharers? Odd that I hadn't thought of that before.

"I'm glad you'restaying," I said. "We need you." IlookedatTravisandNatividad."Weneedyouguys,too. "You're staying,a ren't you?"

"You knowweare," Travissaid. "Although I think I agreemore than I want to with Mora. I'm not sure we haveaprayerofsucceedinghere."

"We'll havewhateverwecan shape," I said. And IturnedtofaceHarry.HeandZahrahadbeen whisperingtog ether.Nowhelookedatme.

"Mora's right," he said. "You're nuts." Isighed.

"But this is a crazy time," he continued. "Maybe you'rewhat the time needs--orwhat we need. I'llstay. I may be sorry for it, but I'llstay."

Nowthedecisionisacknowledged, and we can stop arguing about it. To morrow we'll begin to prepare a winter garden. Next week, several of us will go into town to buy tool s, more seed, supplies. Also, it's time we began to build a shelter. There are trees enough in the area, and we can dig into the ground and into the hills. Morasayshe's builts lave cabins before. Sayshe's eager to build somethin gbetter, something fit for human beings. Besides, this far north and this near the coast, we might get somerain.

SUNDAY,OCTOBER10,2027

TodaywehadafuneralforBankole'sdead--thefive peoplewhodiedinthefire. The cops never came. At last Bankole has decided that they aren't going to come, and that it's time his sister and her family had a decent burial. We collected all the bones that we could find, and yesterday, Natividad wrapped them in a shawl that shehad knitted years ago. It was themostbeautifulthingsheowned.

"Athinglikethatshouldservetheliving,"Bankole saidwhenshe offered it.

"You are living," Natividadsaid. "I like you. I wish I couldhavemetyoursister."

Helookedatherforawhile. Then hetook the shawland hugged her. The n, beginning to cry, he went off by himself into the trees, out of our sight. I let himalone for anhour or so, then went after him.

Ifoundhim,sittingonafallenlog,wipinghisface. I sat with him forsome time,saying nothing. After a while, he got up, waited for me to stand, thenheadedbacktowardourcamp.

"I would like to give them agrove of oak trees," Isaid."Treesarebetterthanstone--life commemoratinglife.

Heglancedbackatme."Allright."

"Bankole?"

He stopped, lookedat me with an expression couldnotread.

"None ofusknewher," I said. "I wish we had. I wishIhad,nomatterhowmuchIwouldhavesurprisedher."

Hemanagedasmile." Shewould have looked at you, then looke dat me, then, right in front of you, I think she would havesaid, 'Well, there'snofool like an old fool.' Once she got that out of her system, I thinkshewouldhavegottentolikeyou."

"Doyouthinkshecouldstand...orforgivecompanynow?"

"No." He drew me to his sideandput one arm around me. "Human beings will survive of course. Some othercountries will survive. Maybe they'll absorbwhat's left of us. Or maybe we'll just break up into a lot of little states quarrelingand fighting with each other over whatevercrumbs are left. That's almost happened no wwith states shutting themselve soff from one another, treating state lines as national borders. As bright as you are, I don't thinkyouunderstand--Idon'tthinkyoucan understandwhatwe'velost.Perhapsthat'sablessing."

"God is Change," I said.

"Olamina, that doesn't meananything."

"It means everything. Everything!"

Hesighed."Youknow,asbadasthingsare,wehaven't even hit bottom yet. Starvation, disea se,drugdamage, andmobrulehaveonlybegun. Federal,state,andlocalgovernmentsstillexist--in nameatleast--andsometimes theymanagetodo somethingmorethancollecttaxesandsendinthemilitary. And the money is still good. That ama zes me. However much more you need of it to buy anything thesedays, it is still accepted. That may be ahopeful sign--orperhapsit's only more evidence of what I just said: We haven't hit bottom yet."

"Well, the group of us heredoesn't have to sinkany lower," I said.

Heshookhisshaggyhead, hishair, beard, and serious expression making himlook more than a littlelike an oldpicture Iused to have of Frederick Douglass.

"I wish I believed that," he said. Perhaps it was his grief talking. "I don't think wehave a hope inhell ofsu cceedinghere."

I slipped my armaround him. "Let'sgoback," I said.

"We've got work to do."

Sotodaywerememberedthefriendsandthefamily memberswe'velost. Wespokeourindividual memoriesandq uotedBiblepassages, Earthseed verses, and bitsofsongsandpoemsthatwere favoritesoftheliving orthedead.

Thenweburiedourdeadandweplantedoaktrees. Afterward, we sat togetherand talked an date amealandd ecidedtocallthisplace Acorn.

A sower went out to sow his seed: and ashe sowed, some fell by the way side; and it was trodden do wn, and the fowls of the air devoured it. And some fell upon a rock; andassoonasitwassprungup,itwithere daway becau se it lackedmoisture. And some fell among thorns; and the thornssprang up with it, and choked it. And other fell ongoodground, and sprangup, and barefruitan hundredfold.

TheBible

Authorized King James Version

St. Luke 8: 5-8